"HOW TO CURE A COLD"

DUCK SUIT

"Now, remember, Seymour," Mrs. Duck told her son, "this is a new suit of clothes, and don't get it dirty. You've got to look nice when you get to Harriet Chick's party."

"Don't worry about me," said Seymour Duck. "My suit will look just as nice as it does now!"

And a few seconds later, Seymour Duck was waddling down the road on his way to Harriet's party. He was whistling at the birds, smiling at the sun, and happily looking at the clouds ...

"Clouds!" Seymour suddenly realized. "That could mean rain, and me with my new suit!"

So he started to run as quickly as little webbed feet would carry him, but it was too late ...

CRASHHH! BOOMMM! BAMMMMM! went the skies. Then SPLASHHHH! came the rain.

Seymour rushed under the leafy arms of a tree and watched the waters fall all around him.

"Whew!" he told himself. "I just made it. But I sure hope it doesn't last long. I'll never get to the party this way."

Then as if the skies bowed to his wishes, the rain stopped as suddenly as it started.

"Heh, heh," chuckled Seymour, "this suit of mine is as nice as ever."

But he didn't smile long. For right on the road he had to take was a great big puddle of mud. It stretched from one side of the road to the other, and looked almost a foot deep.

"Gosh," sighed Seymour. "How am I ever going to get across this?"

He looked up at the tall trees on the side of the road and decided they would have to be his route. So he climbed a tree that almost scraped the sky and by going from branch to branch of the many touching trees, he was able to get by the puddle and keep his suit as clean as always.

"Yes, sir," Seymour told himself, "my suit is going to be as clean as new when I get to that party!"

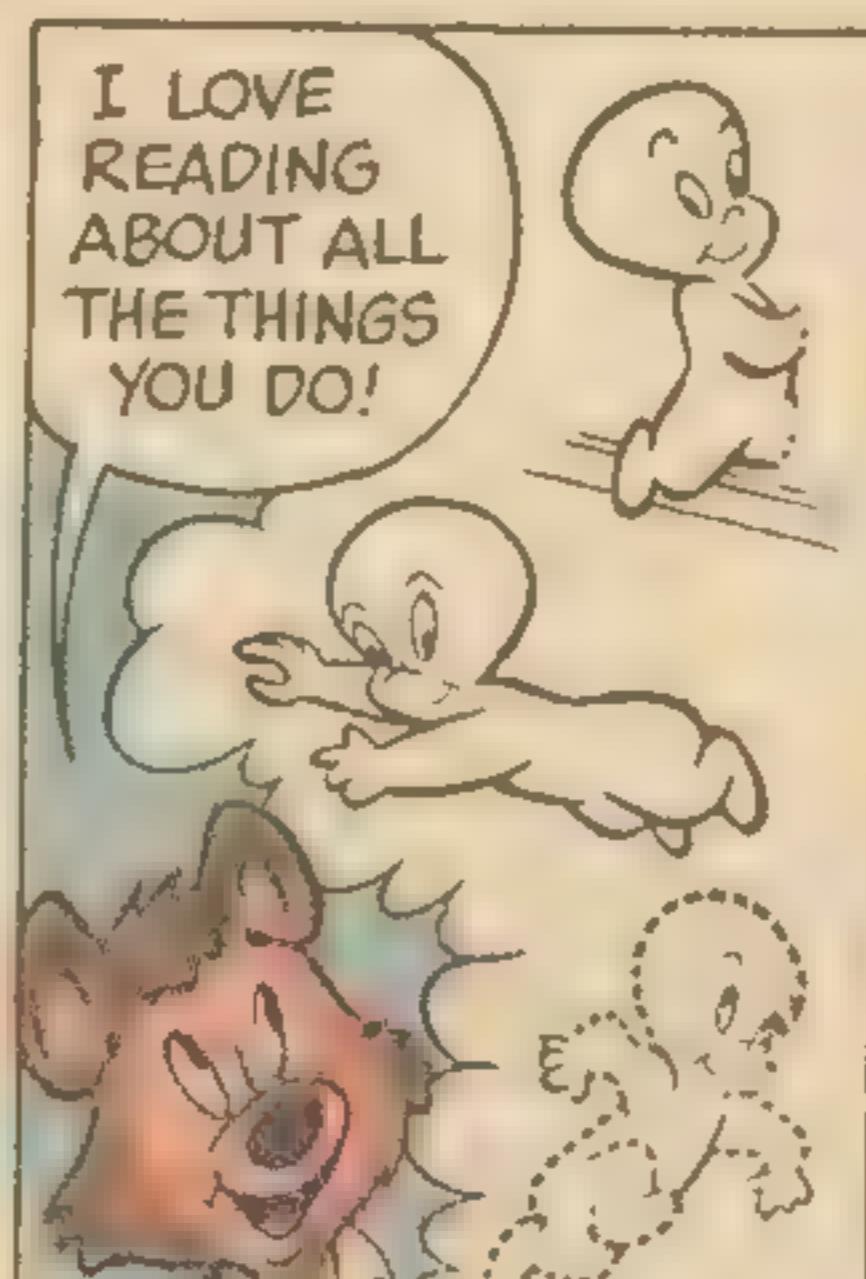

And sure enough it was. When Seymour Duck walked through Harriet Chick's house, every animal at the party had a nice word for Seymour and that beautiful new suit.

"Yes, sir," Seymour was telling them as he sat eating his ice-cream, cake and candy. "This suit is as nice and clean as when I started out. I had to brave a terrific rainstorm, cross a gigantic puddle and go through many other terrible things. But my suit still is as good as new!"

It was only then that Seymour Duck realized that all the animals at the party were laughing at him. And it was only then that Seymour saw that the suit that had bested rain and puddles and mud was dripping with ice-cream and cake and candy!

So Seymour smiled and said, "Well, it was as good as new when I first came in!"

CASPER, THE FRIENDLY GHOST

JEST FOR FUN

The animals of Tipsytown had a picnic last month, and there were some funny things that happened there...

Jimmy Squirrel had wanted some popcorn, but he didn't have any money. So he went to his brother Joe and said, "Gee, Joe, I could use some money to get some popcorn, but I haven't the faintest idea where to get it."

"I'm glad to hear that," said Joe, "I thought you were going to ask me!"

* * *

When Jimmy finally got the money, he went to the pop-corn man, and asked him for a bag.

"Do you want the five-cent bag or the ten-cent bag?" asked the pop-corn man.

"Well, what's the difference?" questioned Jimmy.

"The ten-cent bag costs more!" said the man.

* * *

Quite a few of the raccoons had lined up in front of the custard stand, and the owner was getting angry.

"Scram you raccoons," he told them. "Hit the road!"

Just then Mrs. Duck came walking by. "You shouldn't talk to the little dears that way," she told the owner, "just say 'shoo! shoo!' and you'll be surprised how quickly they'll scram and hit the road!"

* * *

SAD SACK

Robbie Rabbit had gotten friendly with the owner of the bowling alley. "What's your name?" he asked him.

"My name is George Washington," he told Robbie.

"Wow! That's a pretty famous name," said Robbie.

"It should be," said the man from the bowling alley. "I've been at this spot for thirty years!"

* * *

Peter Porcupine was watching an artist drawing beautiful pictures of the picnic grounds. Finally, he went over to the artist, and said:

"Someone told me that artists are so honest that if you hang your watch on the branch of a tree near them and go away for two weeks, you'll still find it there."

"Of course, that's true," said the artist.

"You mean," said Peter, "when you hang your watch on the tree and come back in two weeks, the watch is still there?"

"No," answered the artist. "The tree is!"

* * *

Stewie Squirrel just had to tell something to his friend, Frankie. He ran up to him, and said:

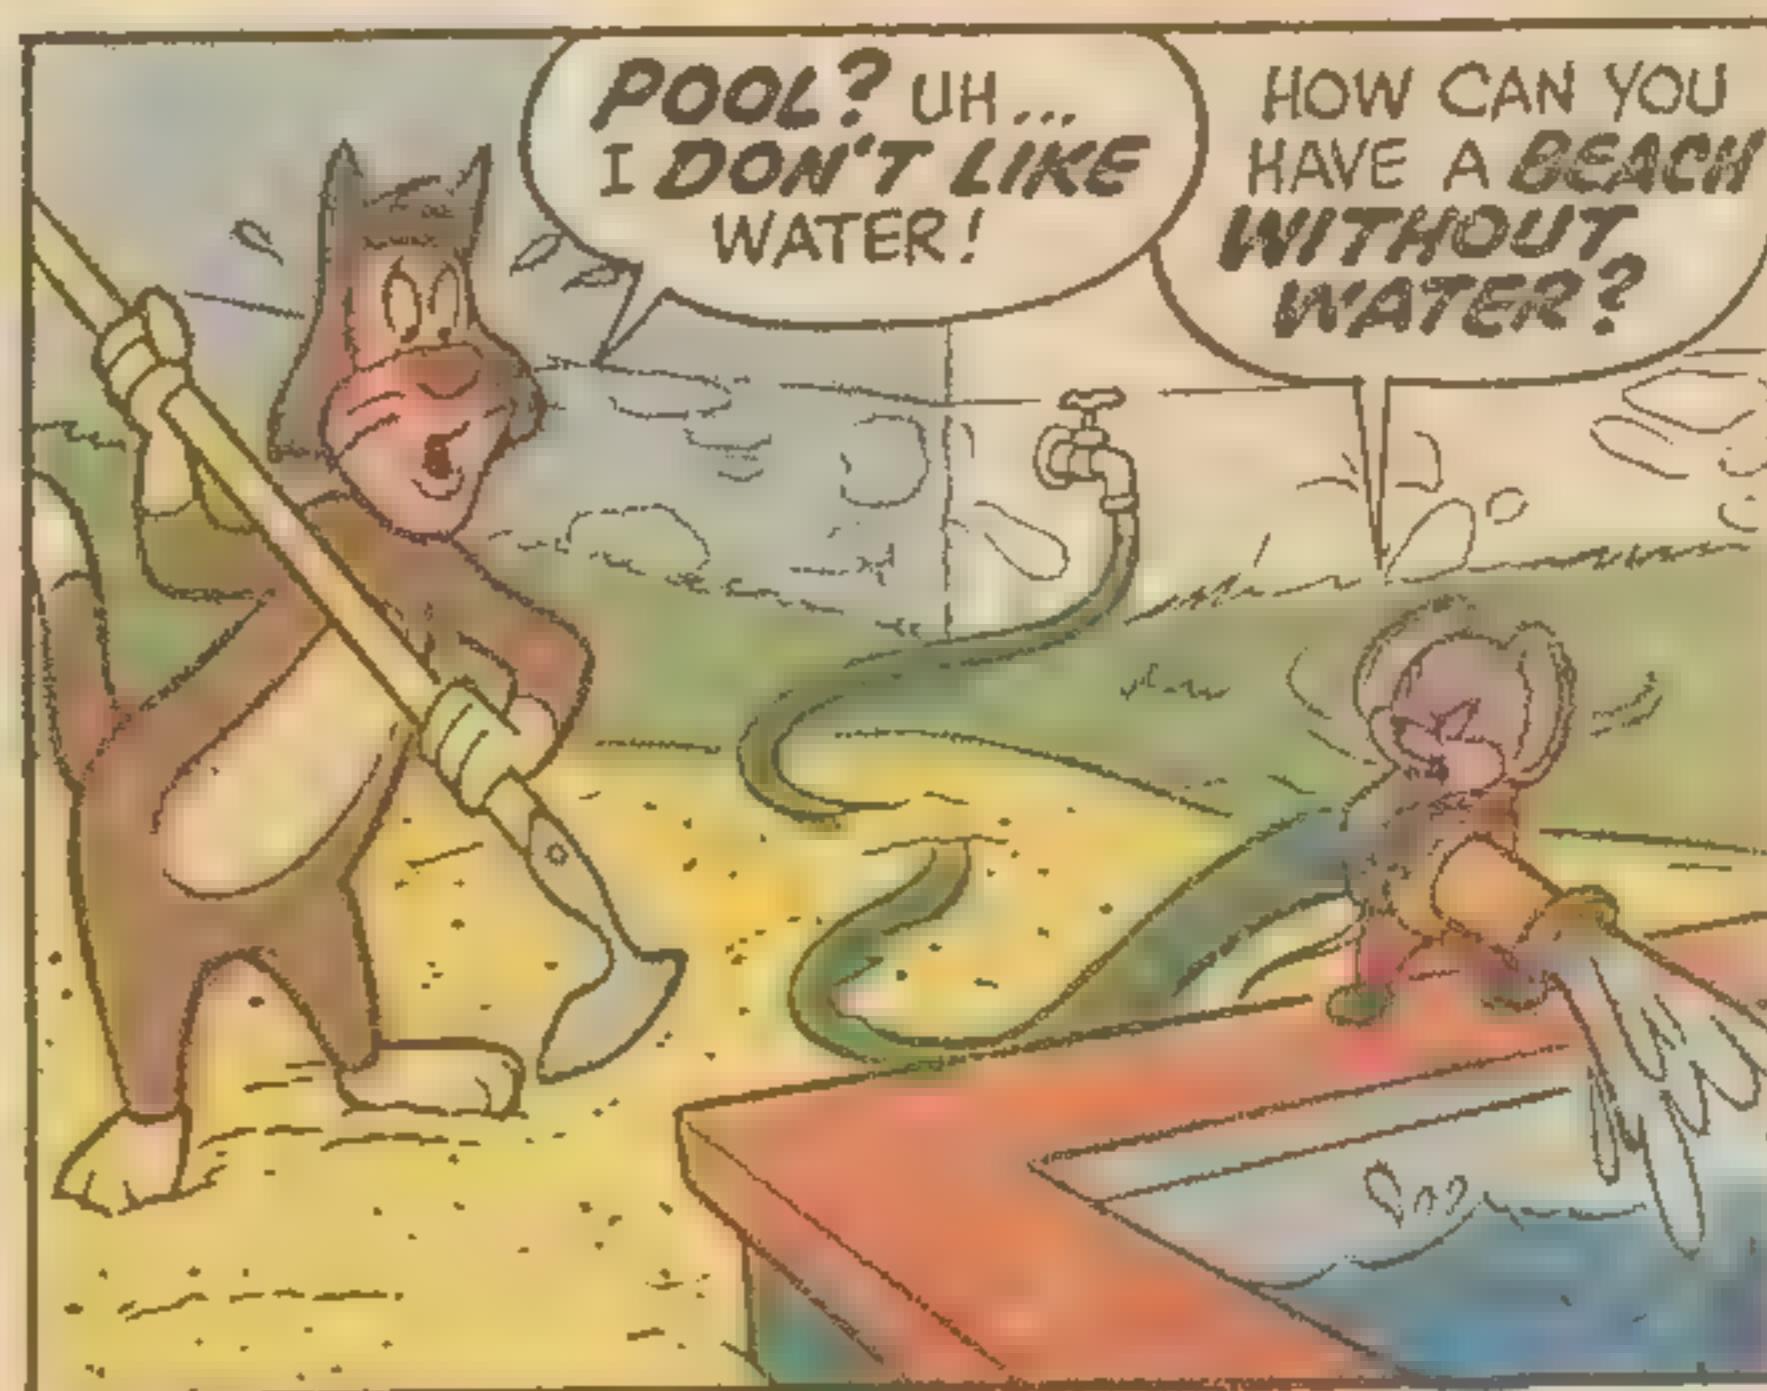

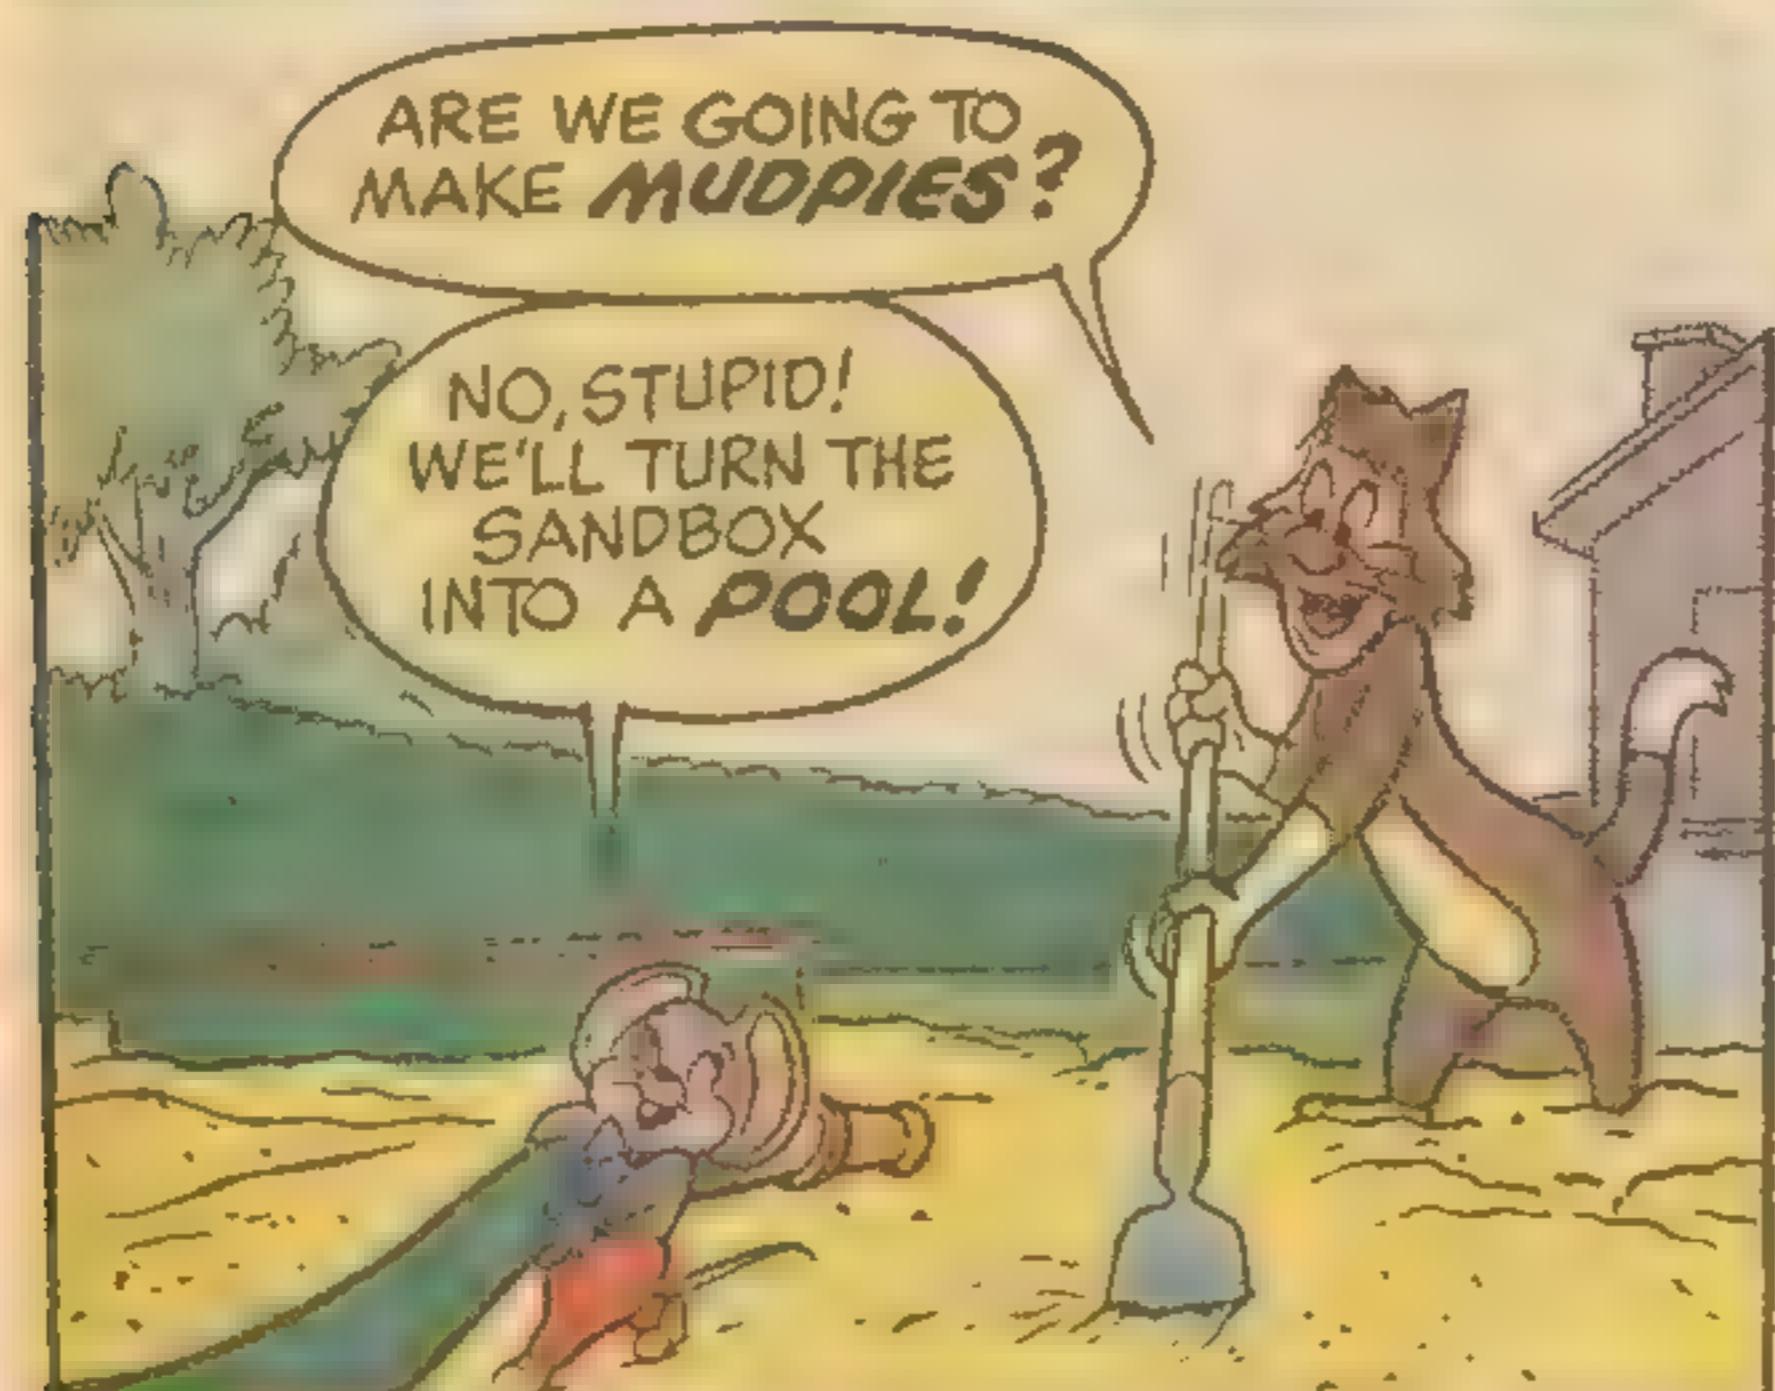

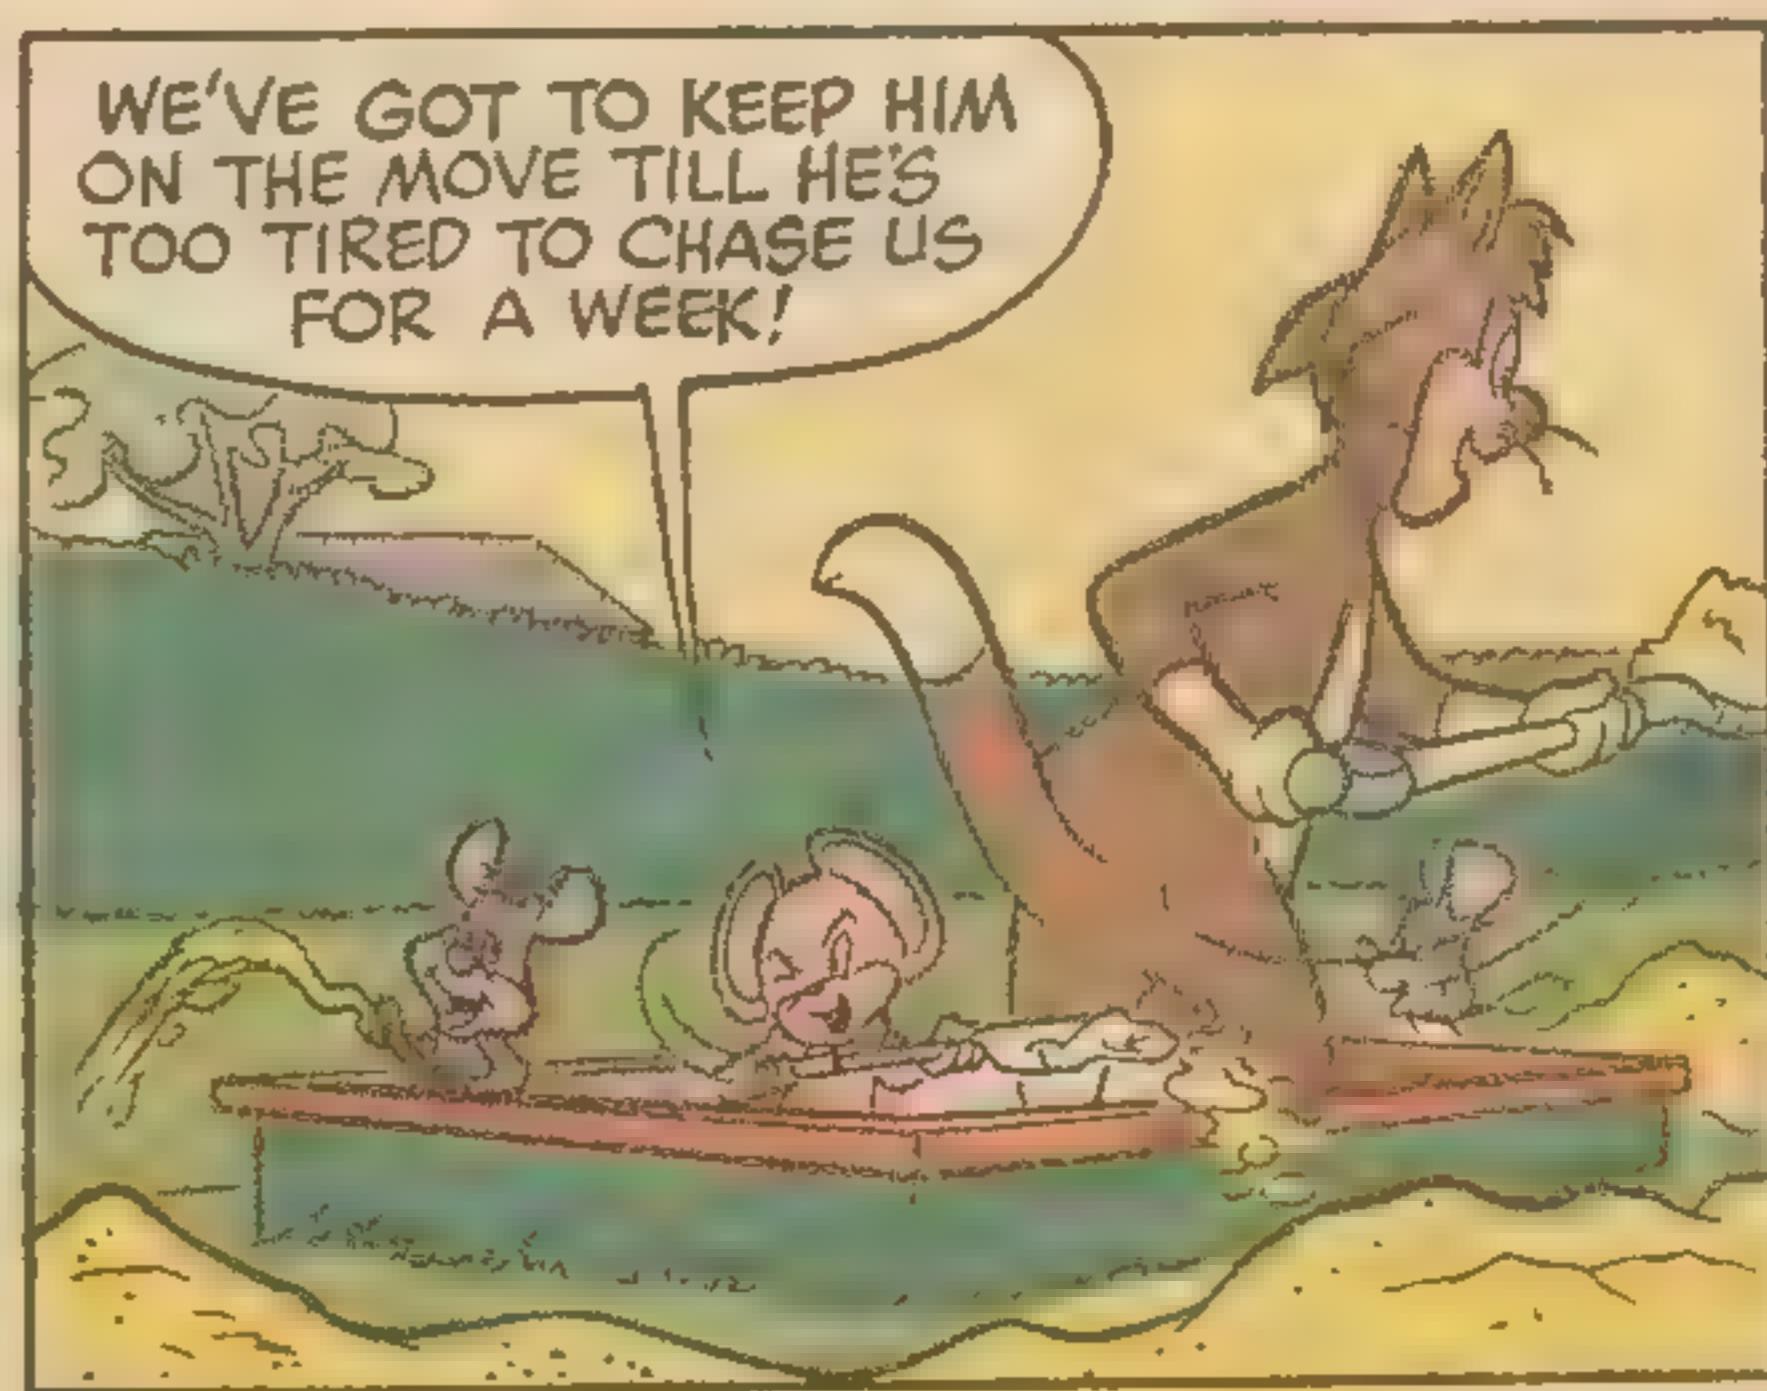

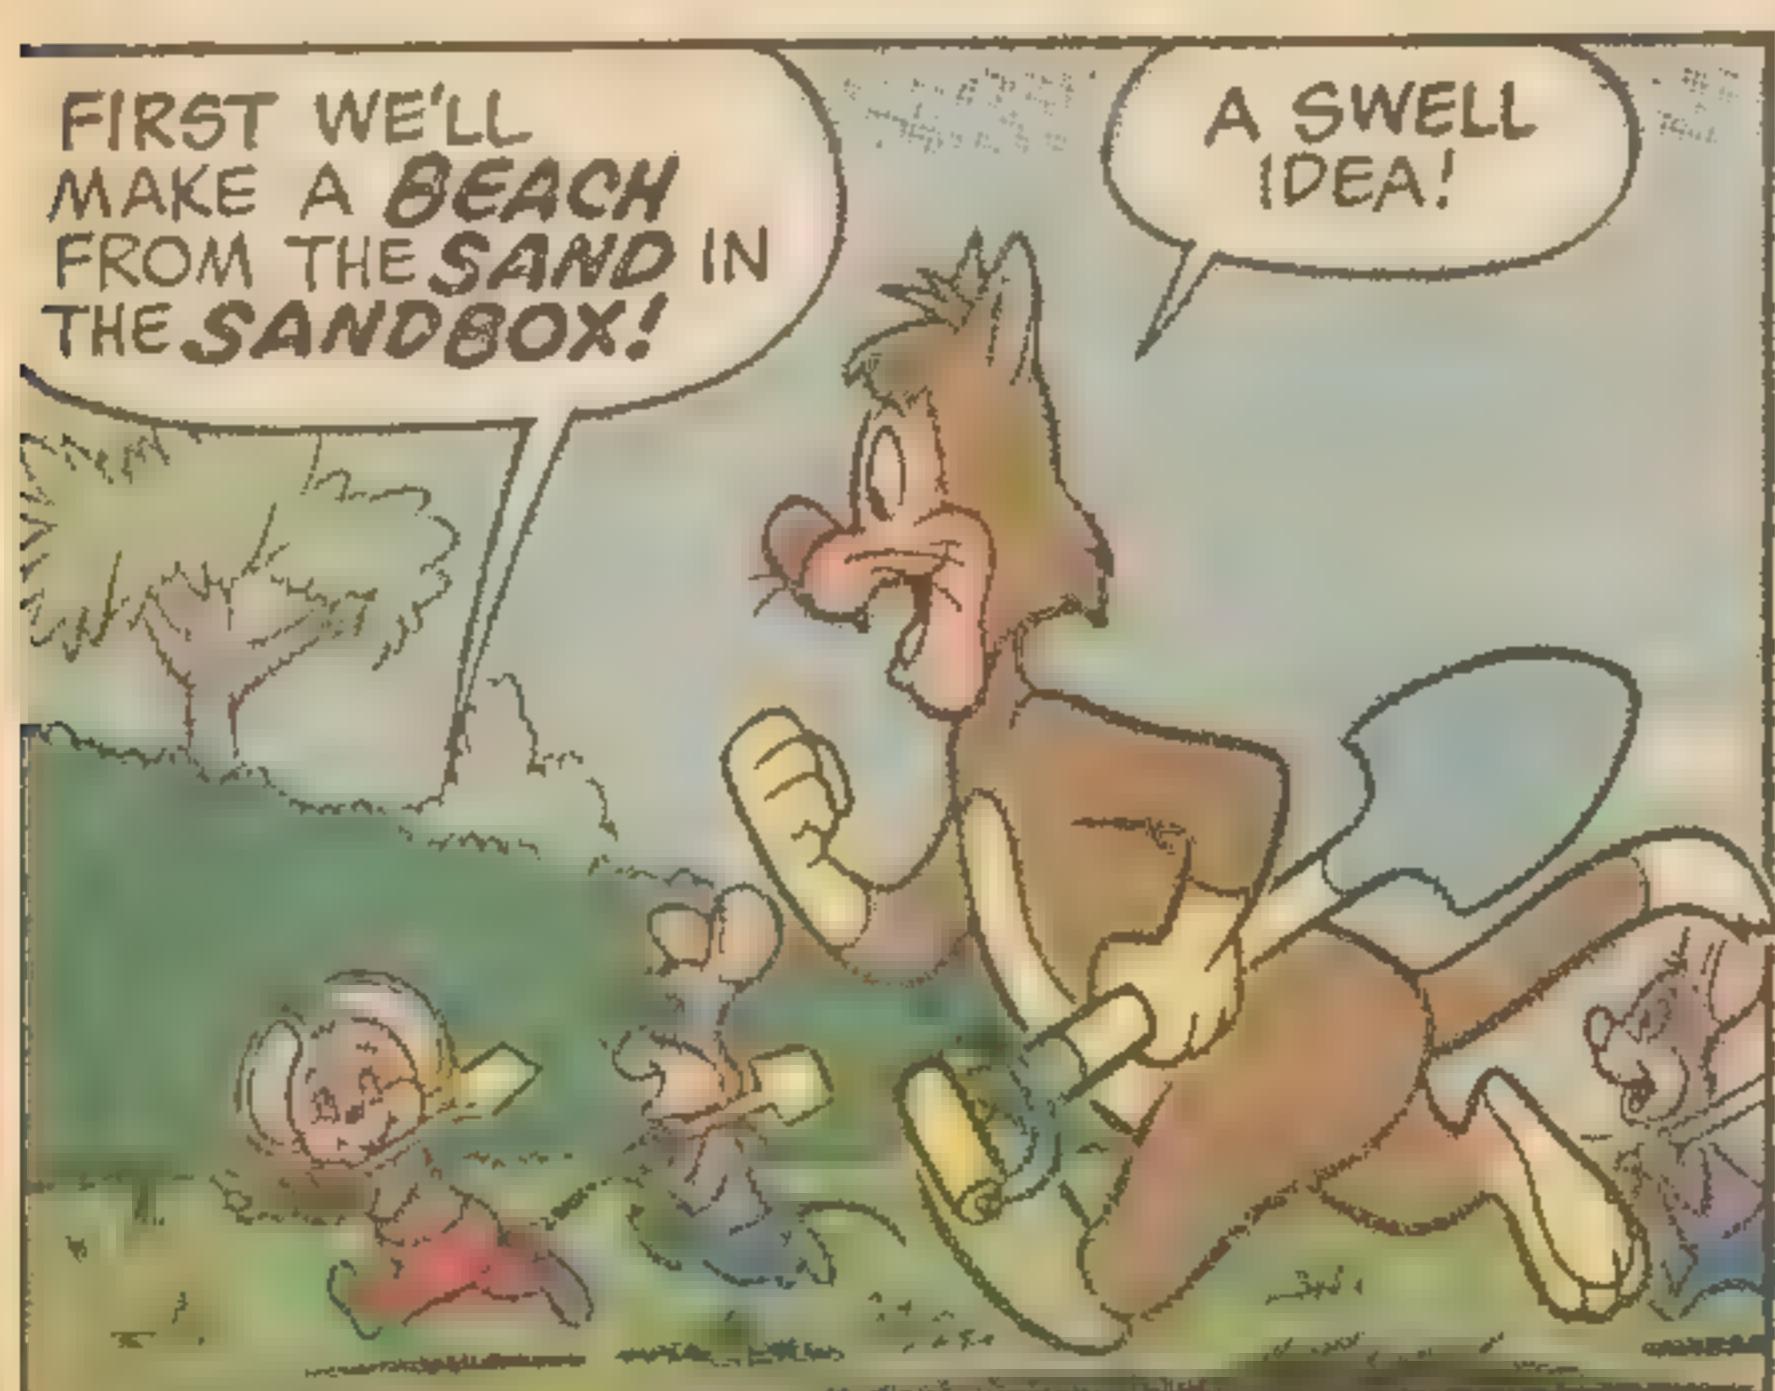

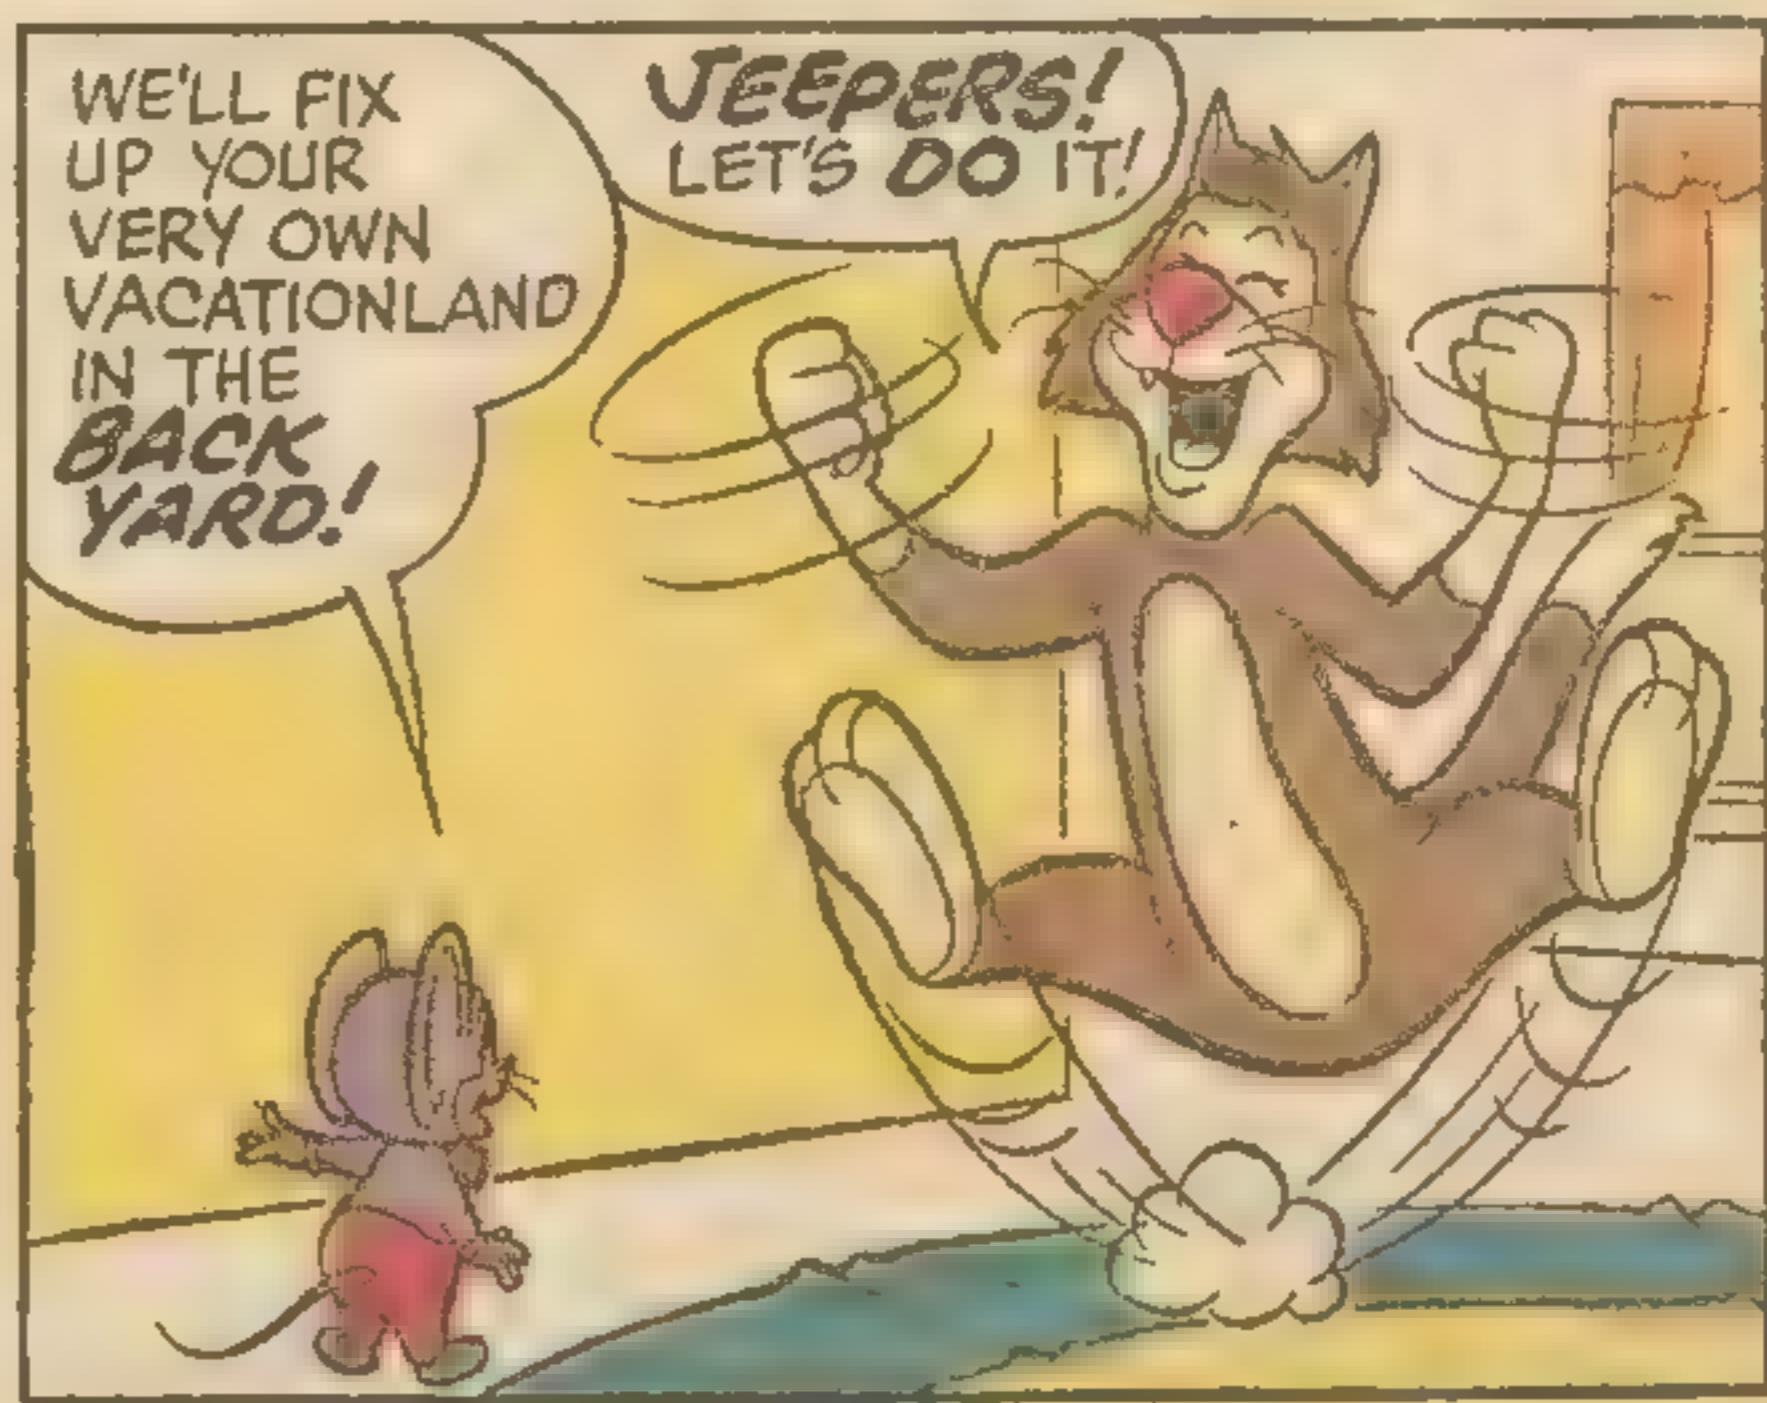

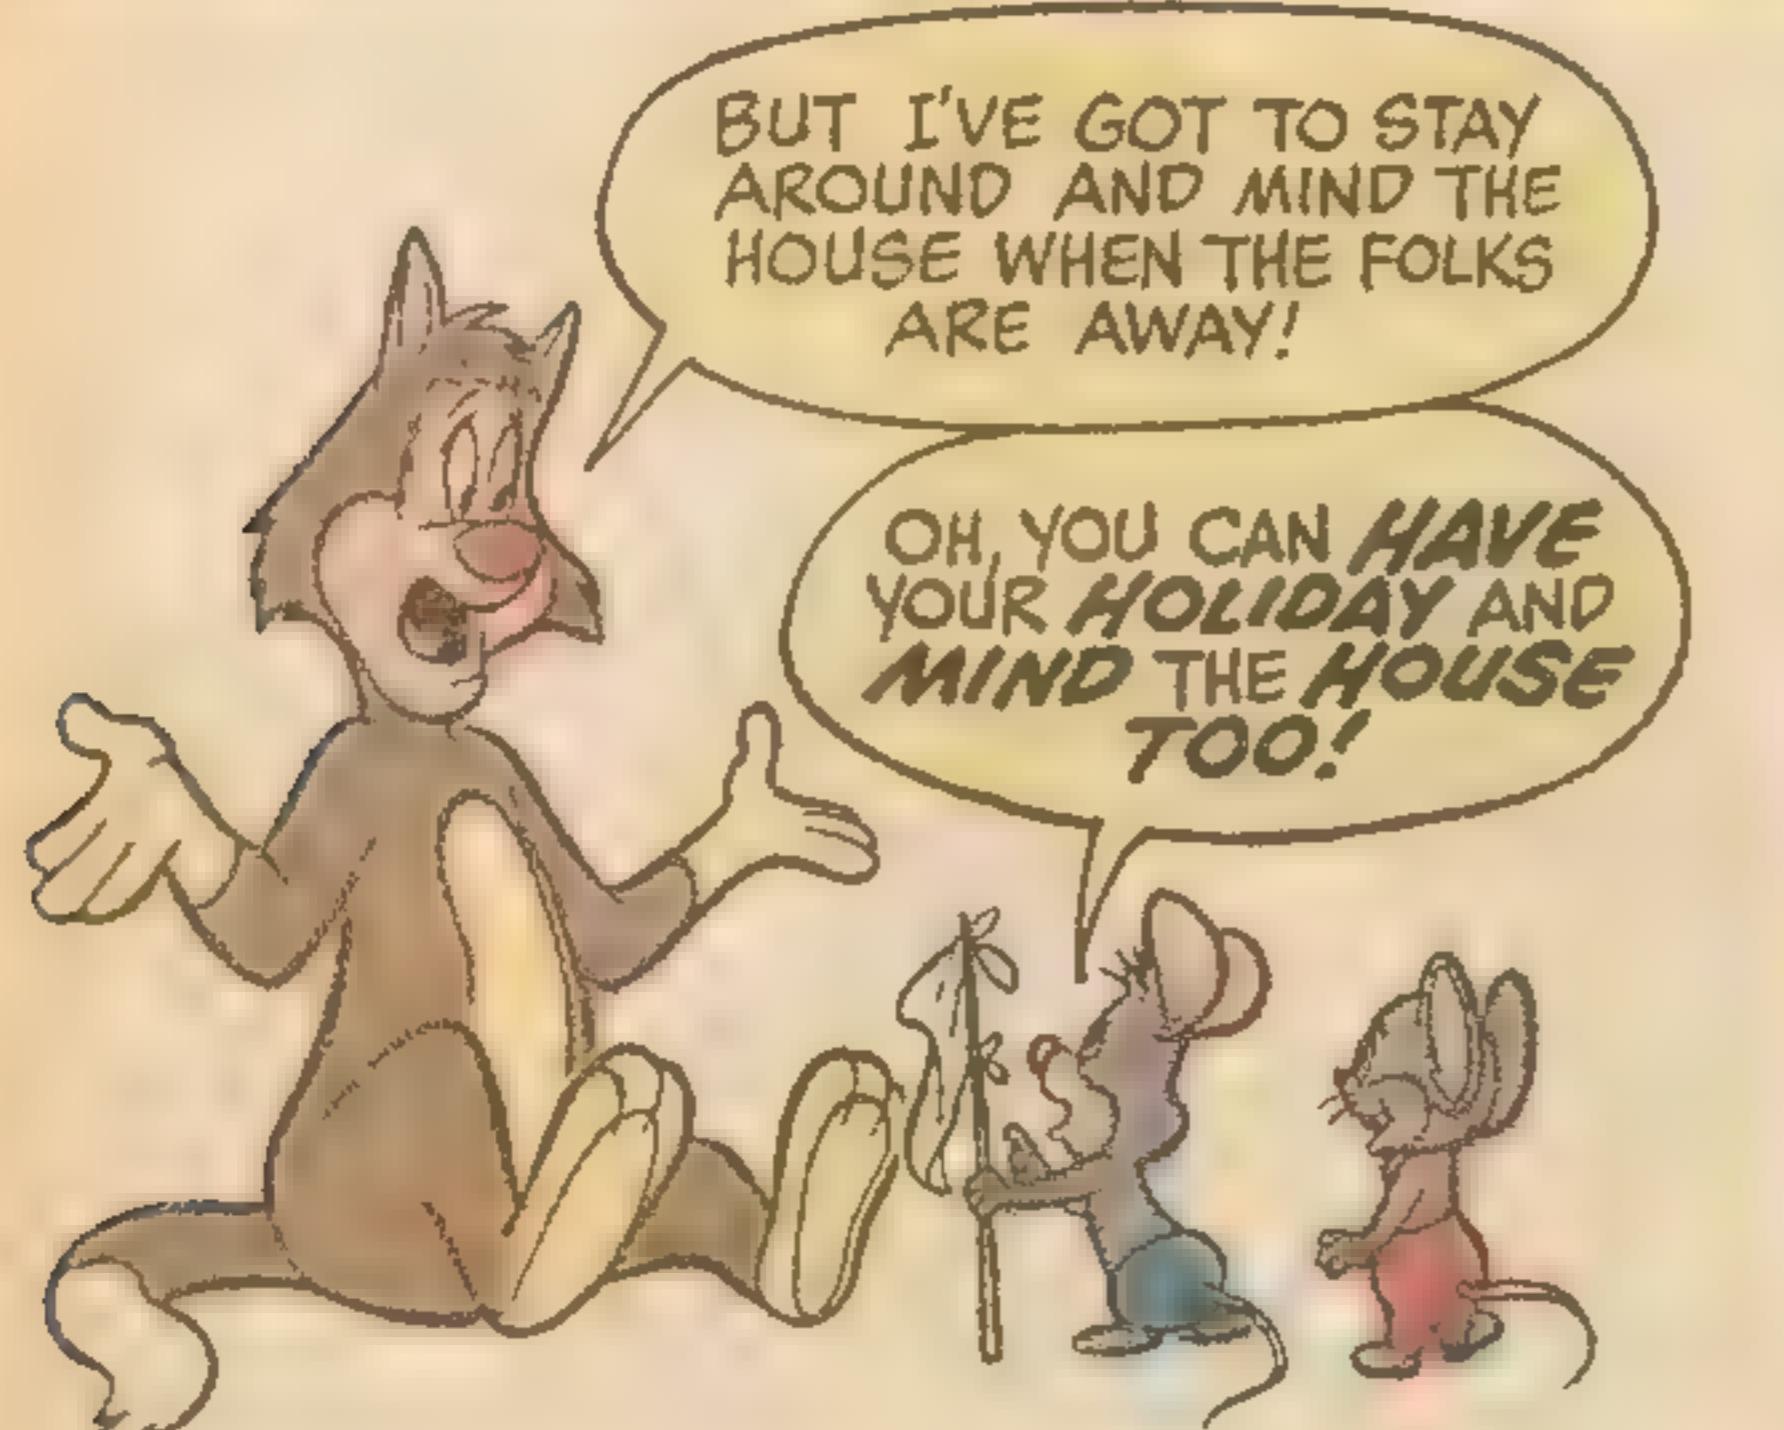

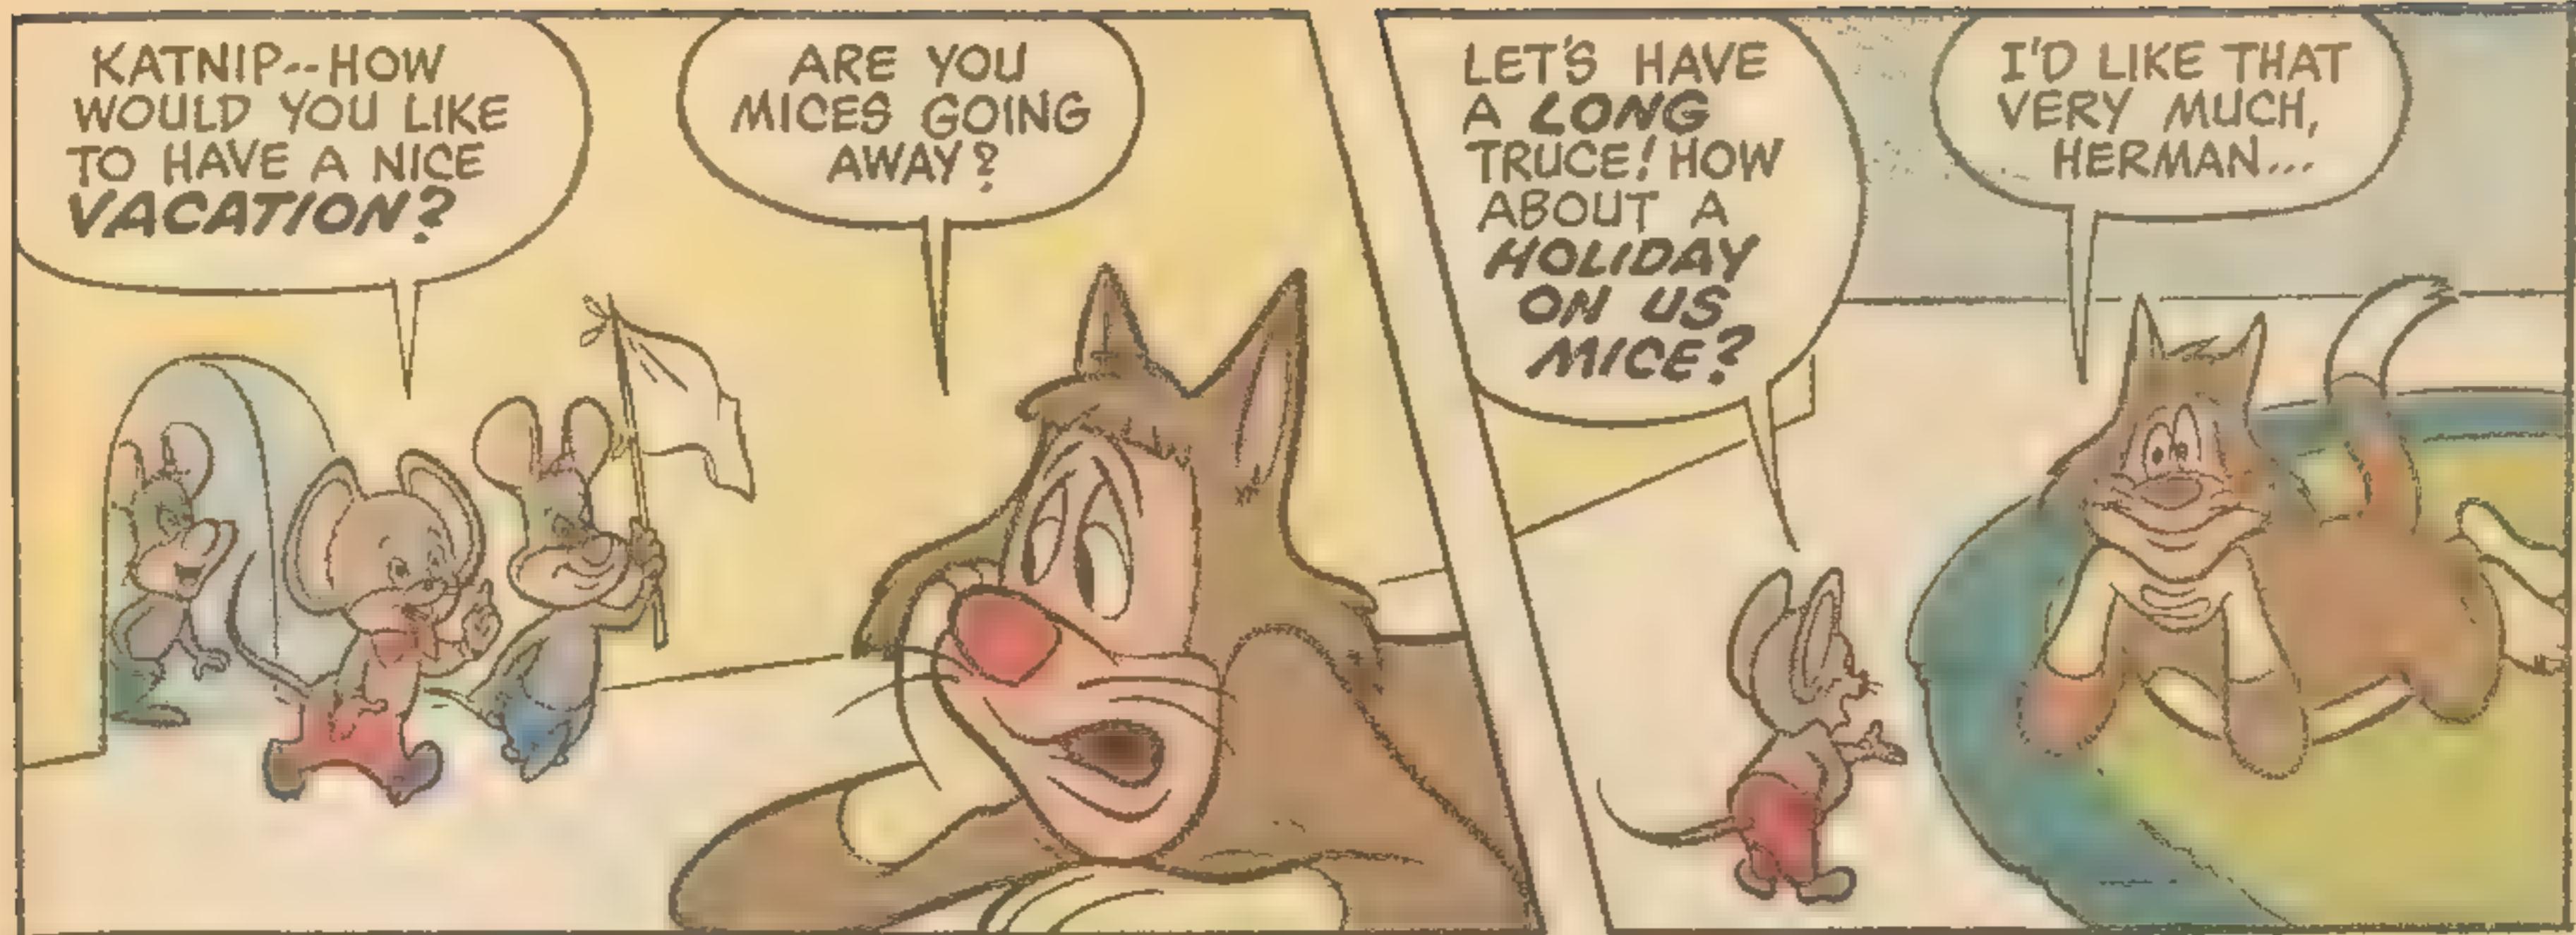

"Frankie, did you hear that Mrs. Smith's brother went to Buffalo and made fifty thousand dollars in the jewelry business?"

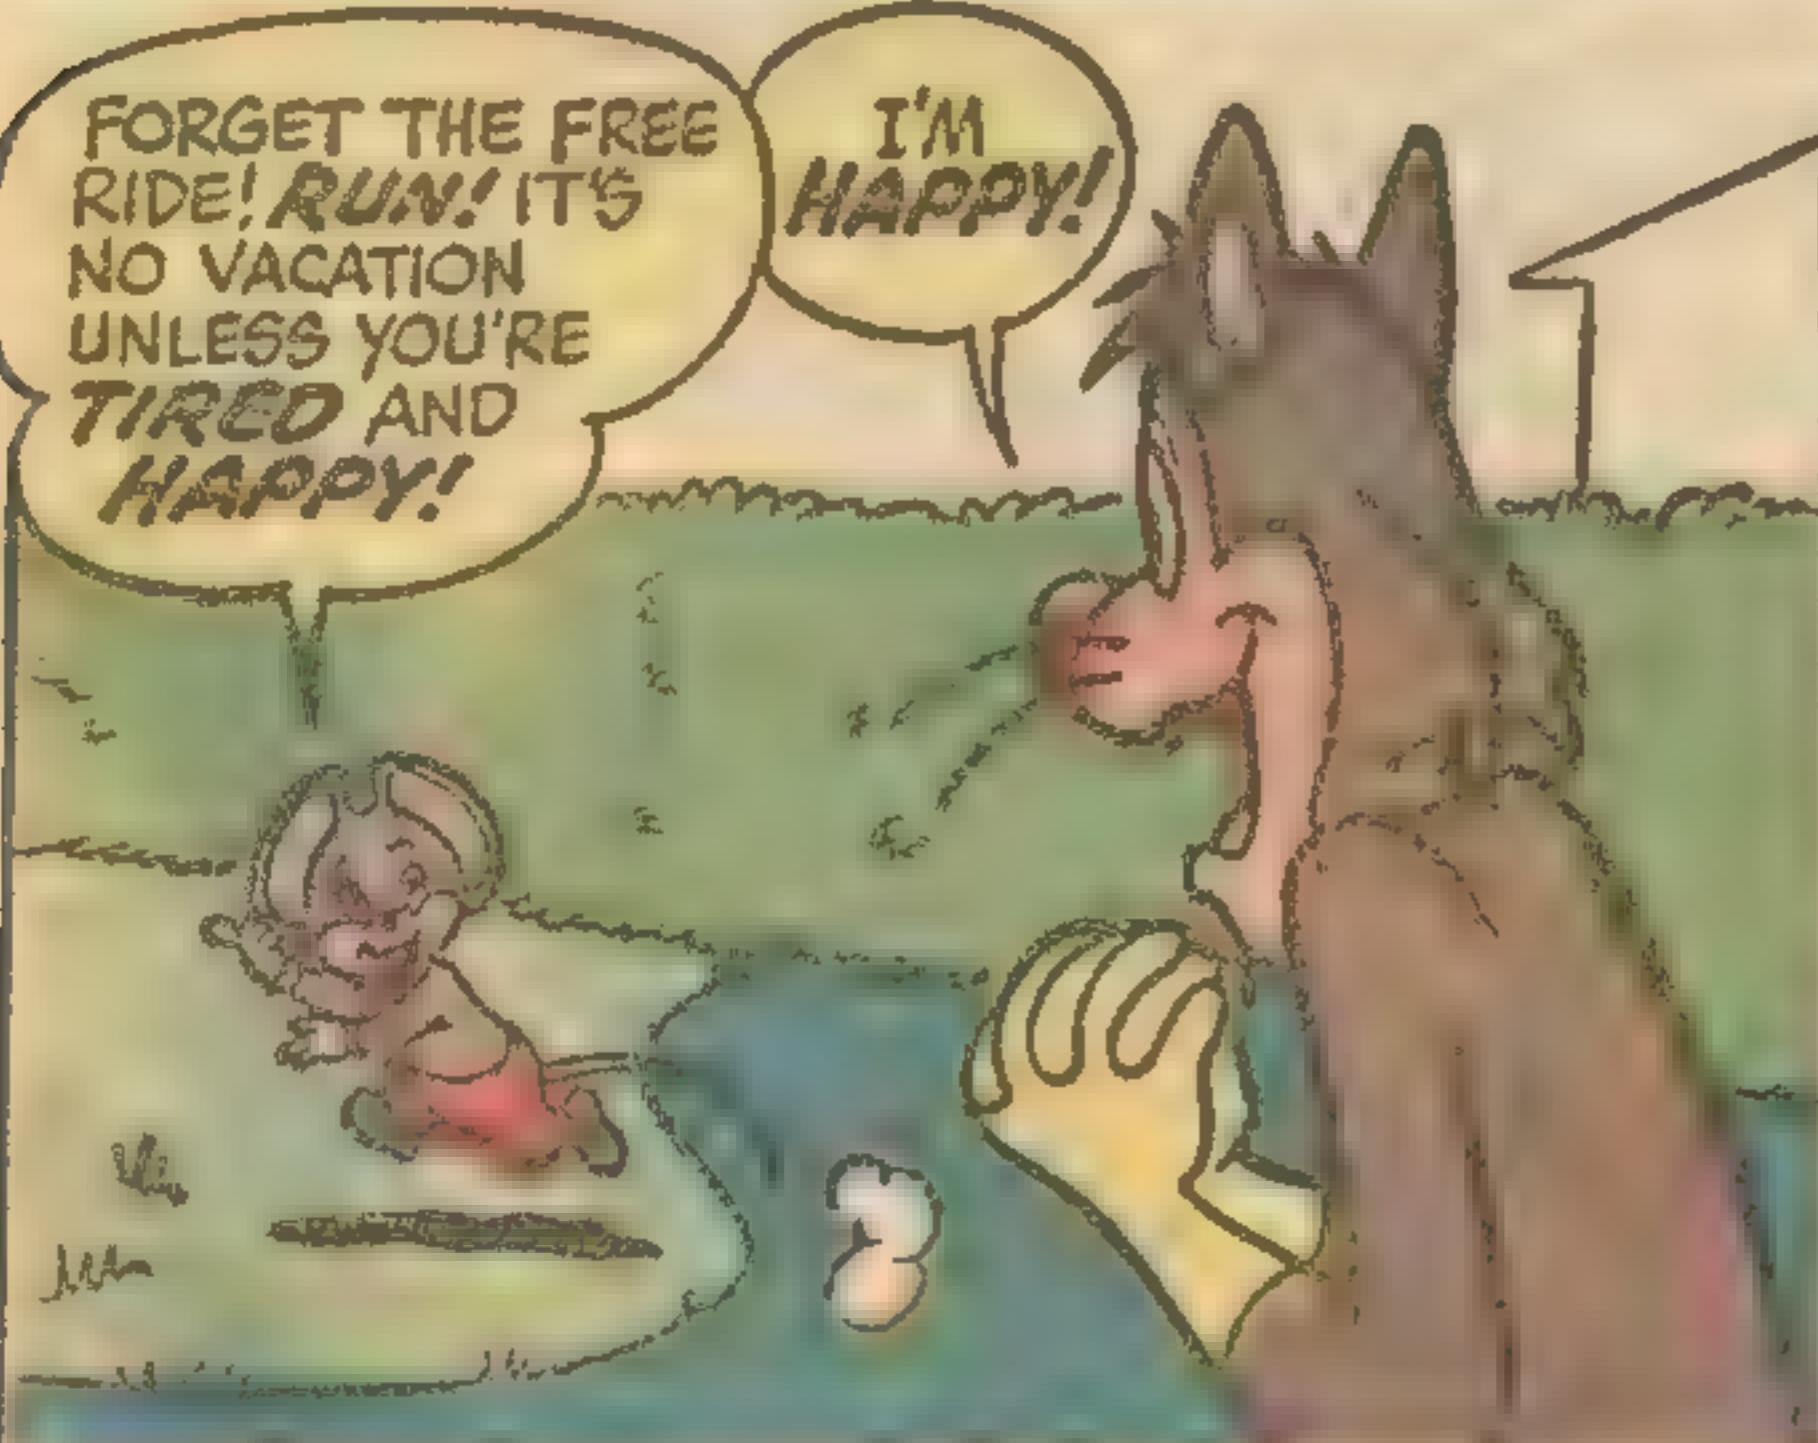

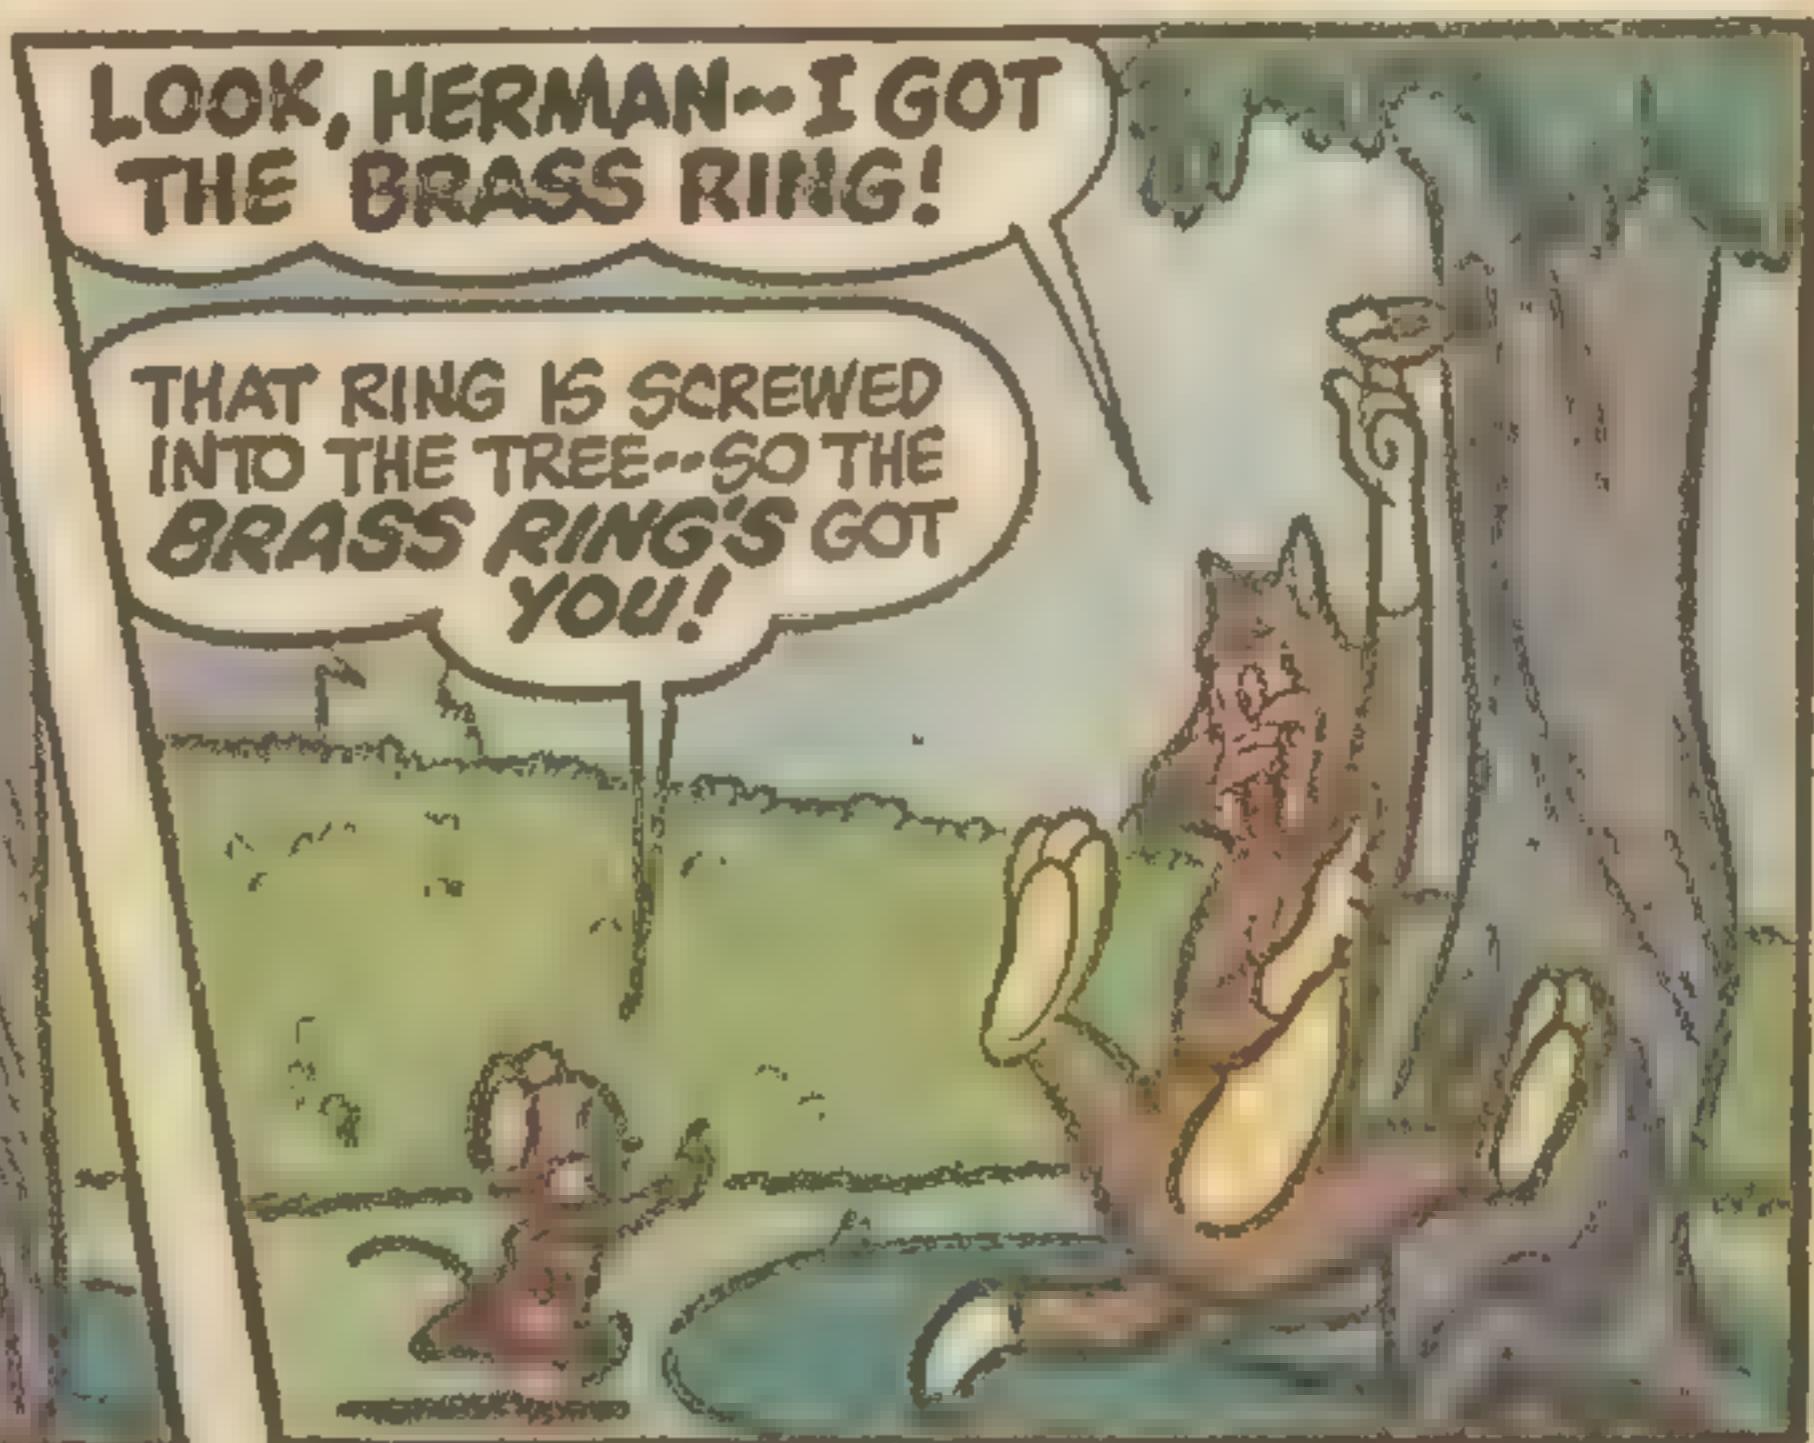

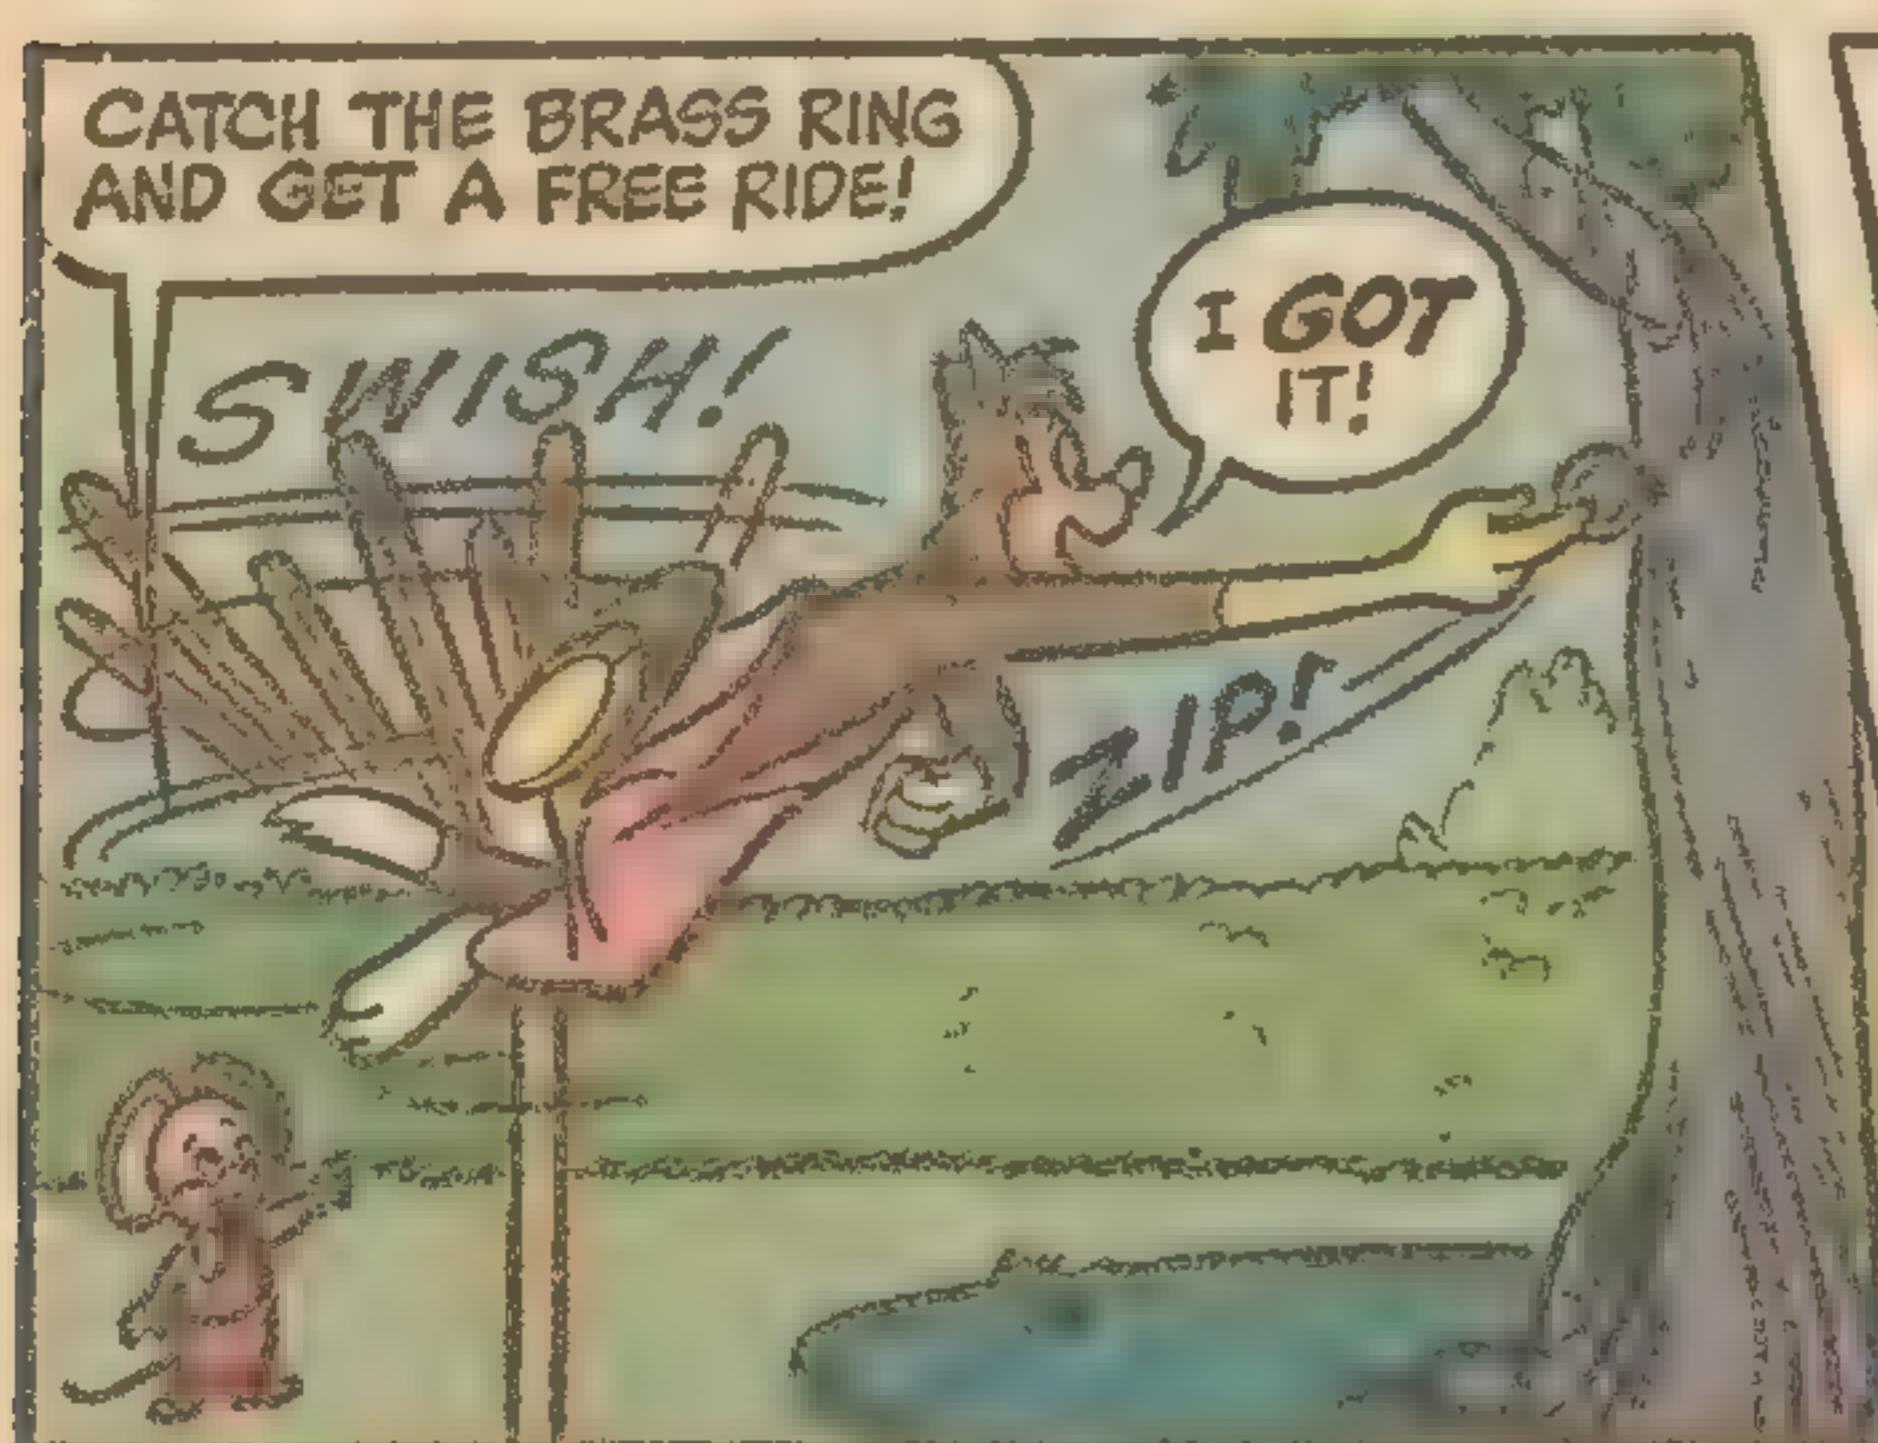

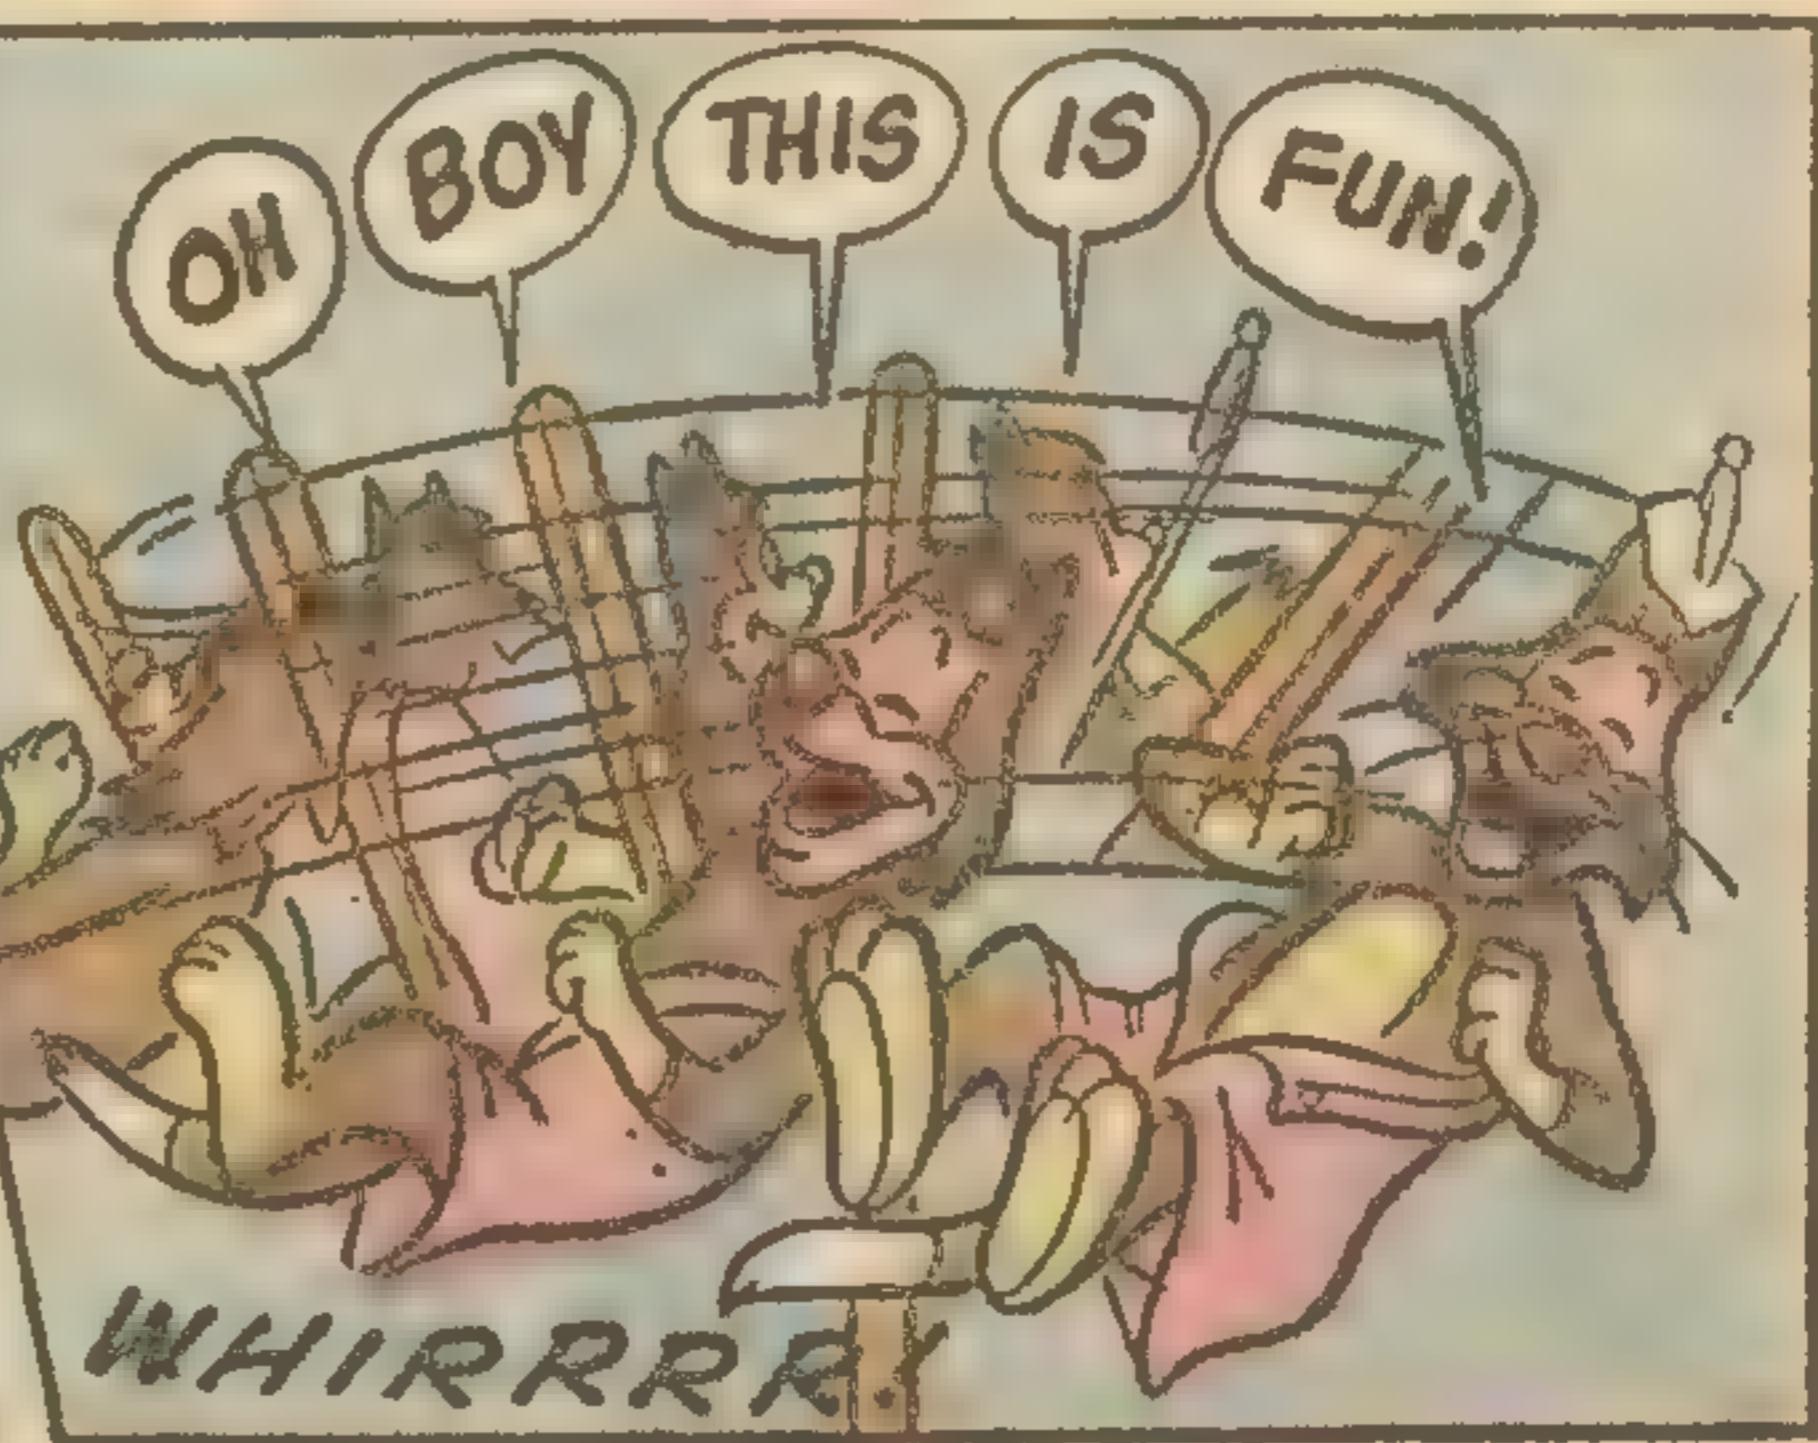

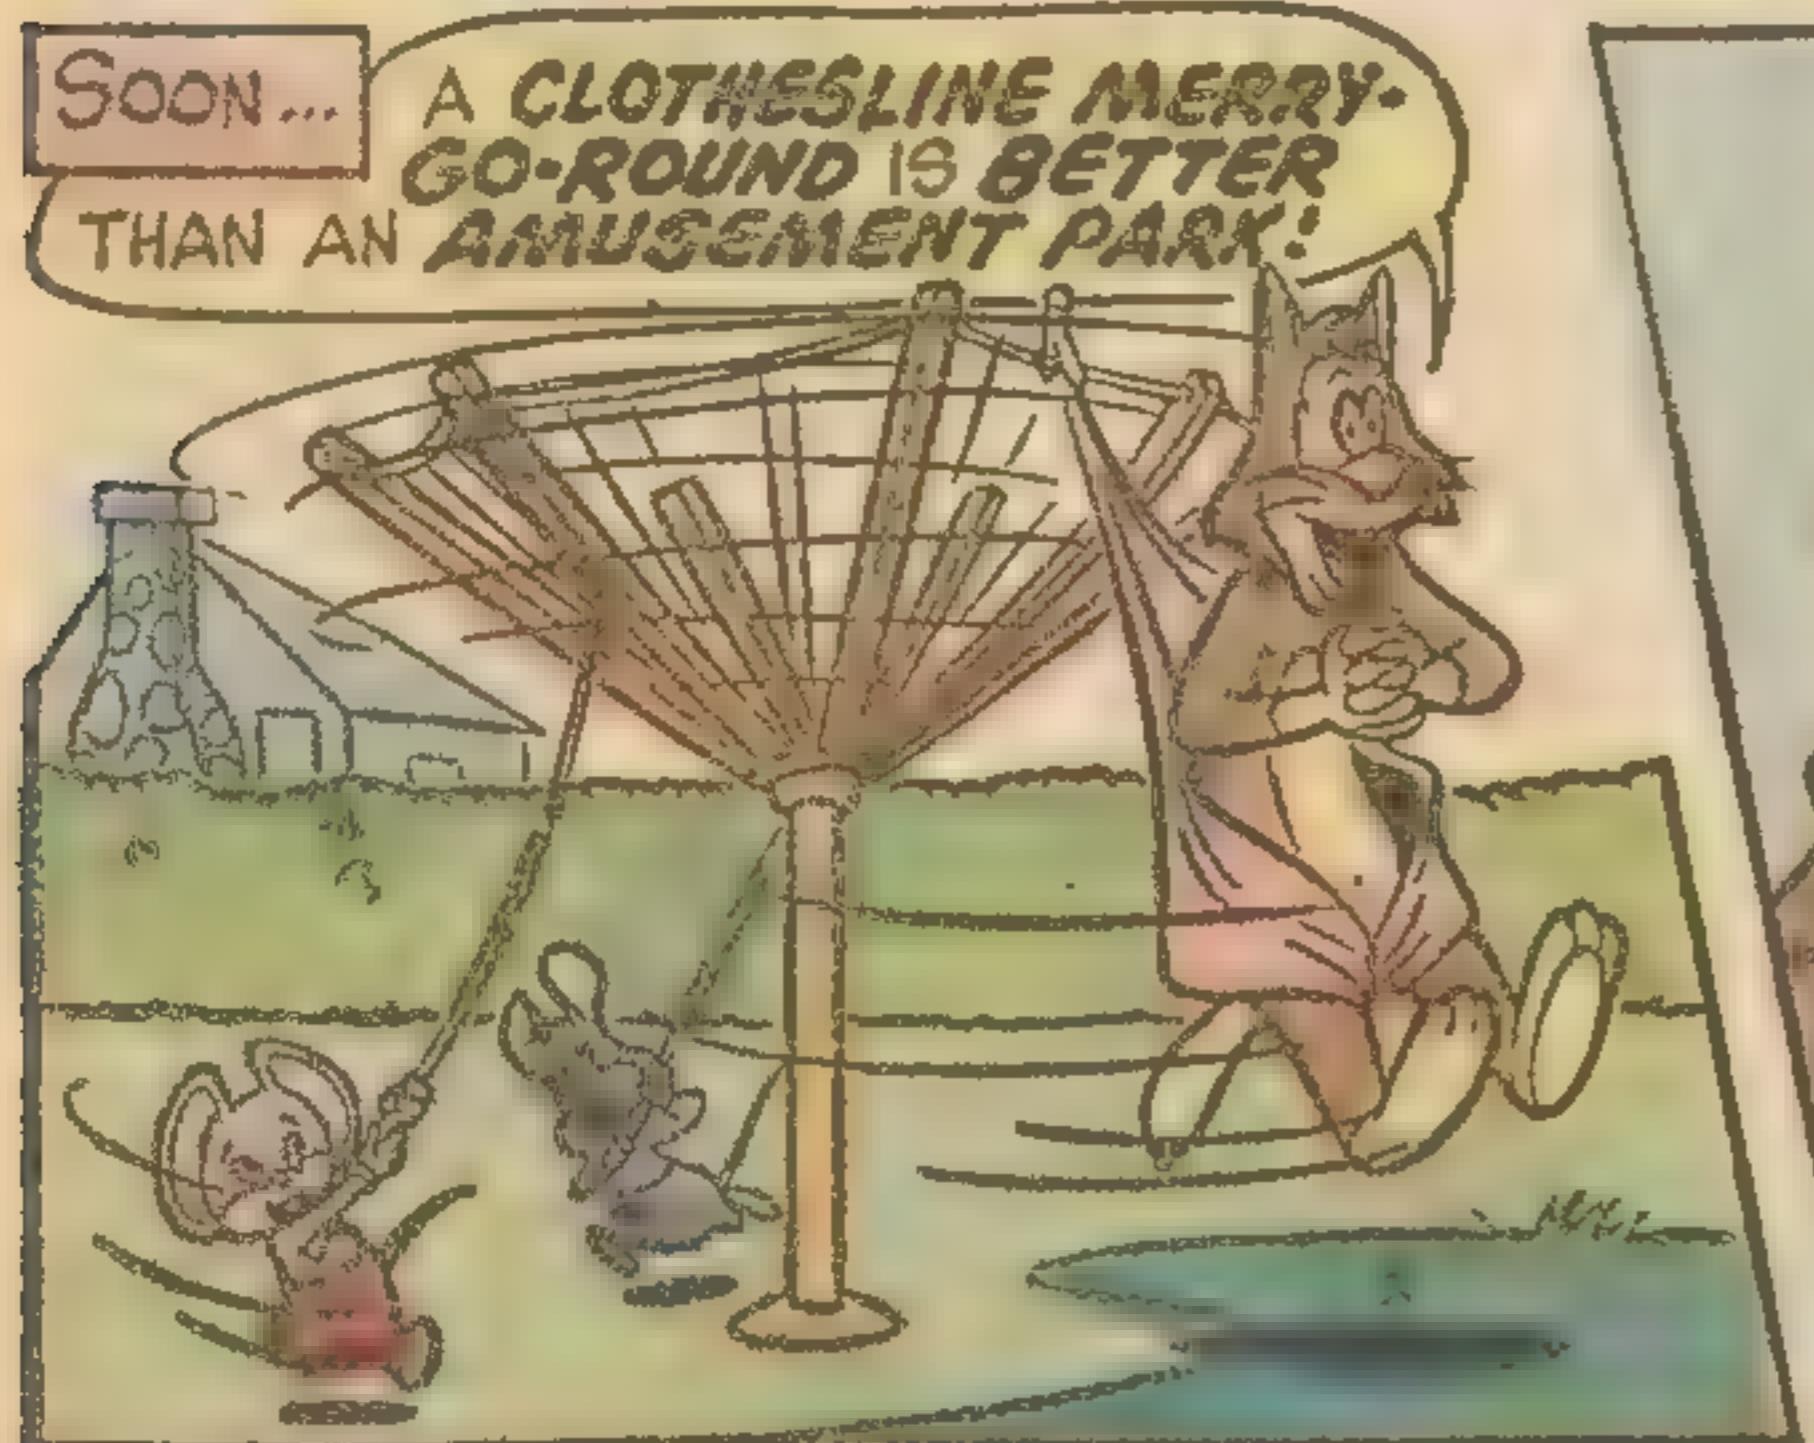

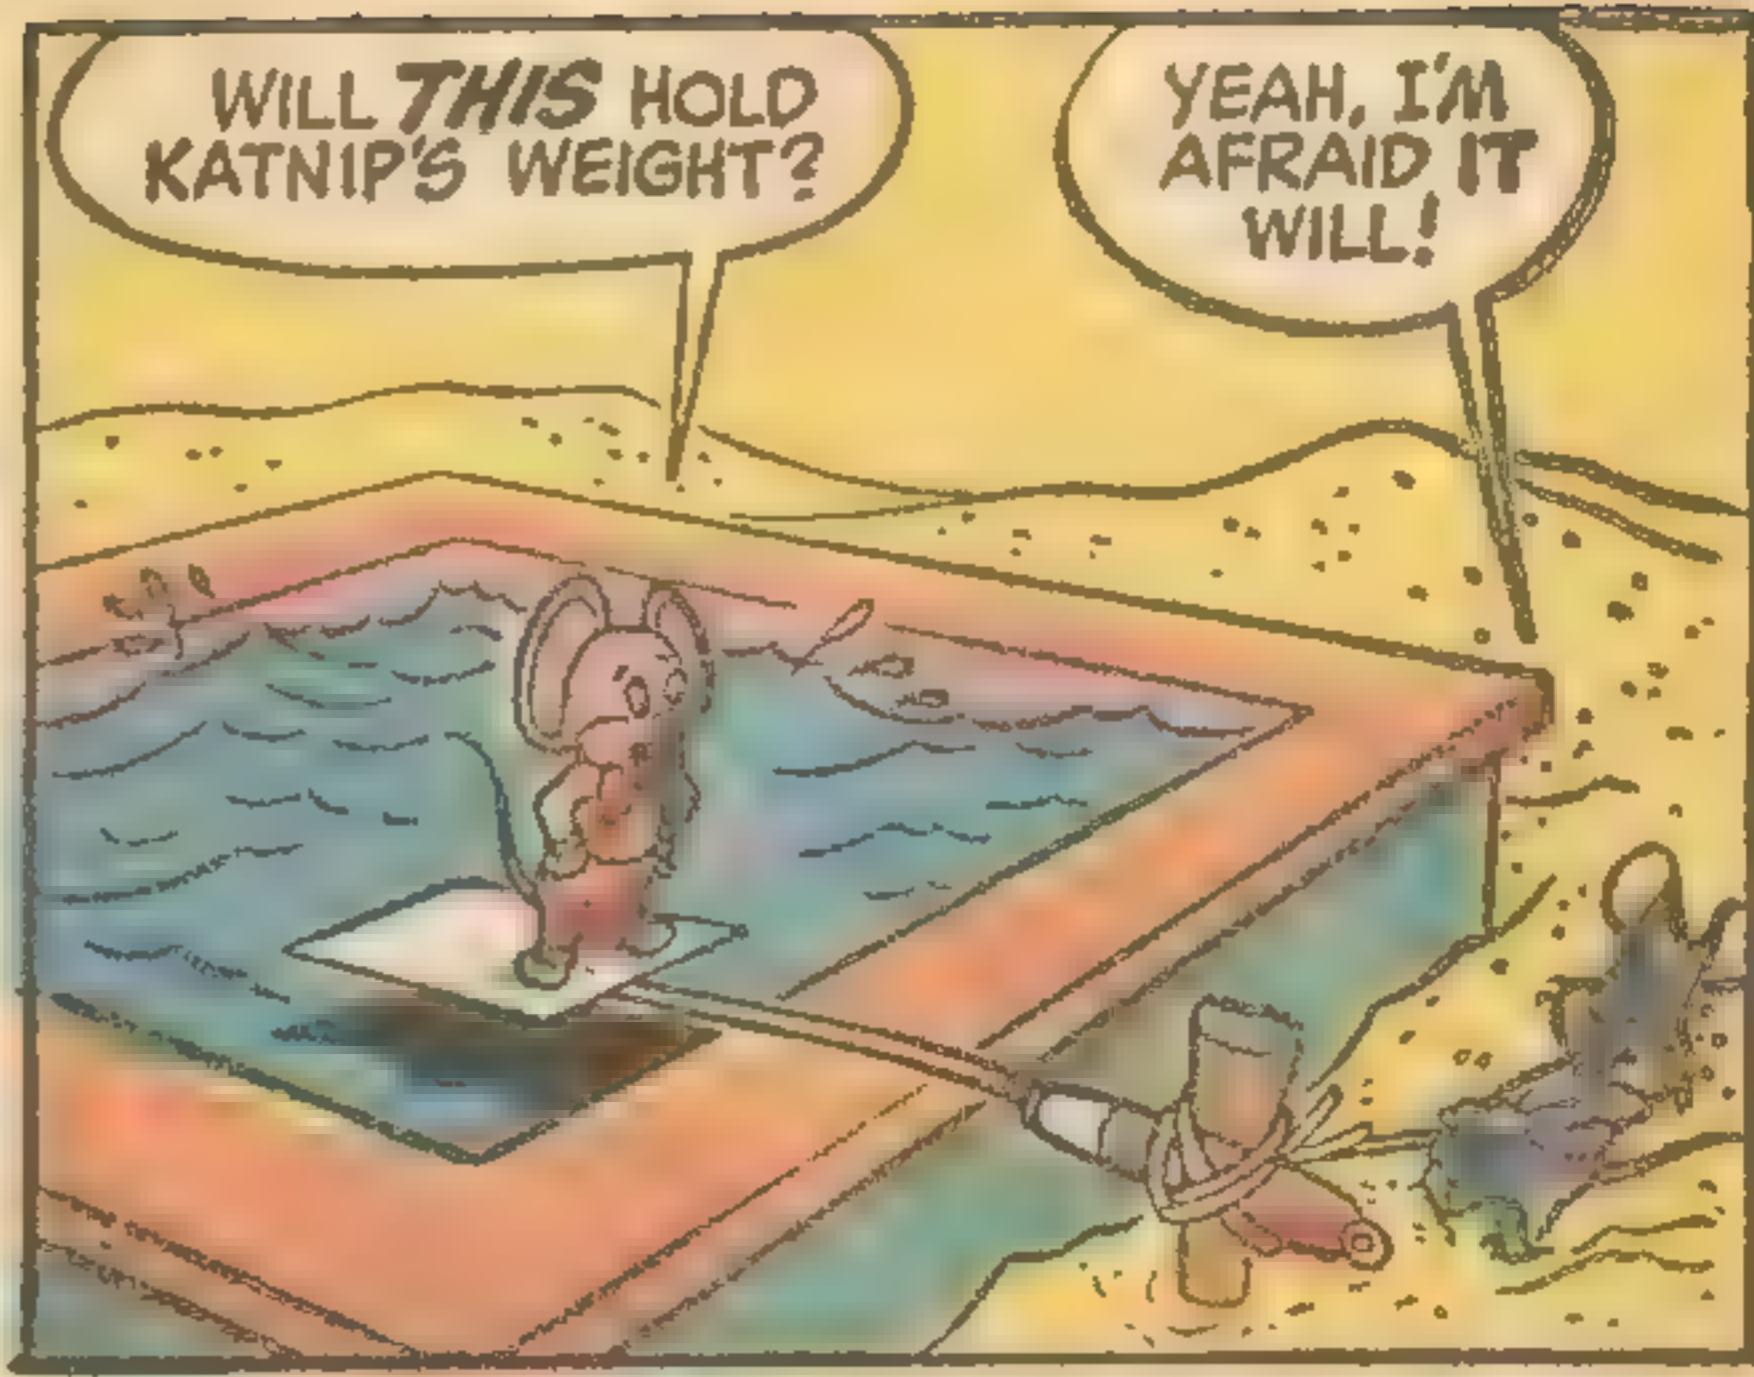

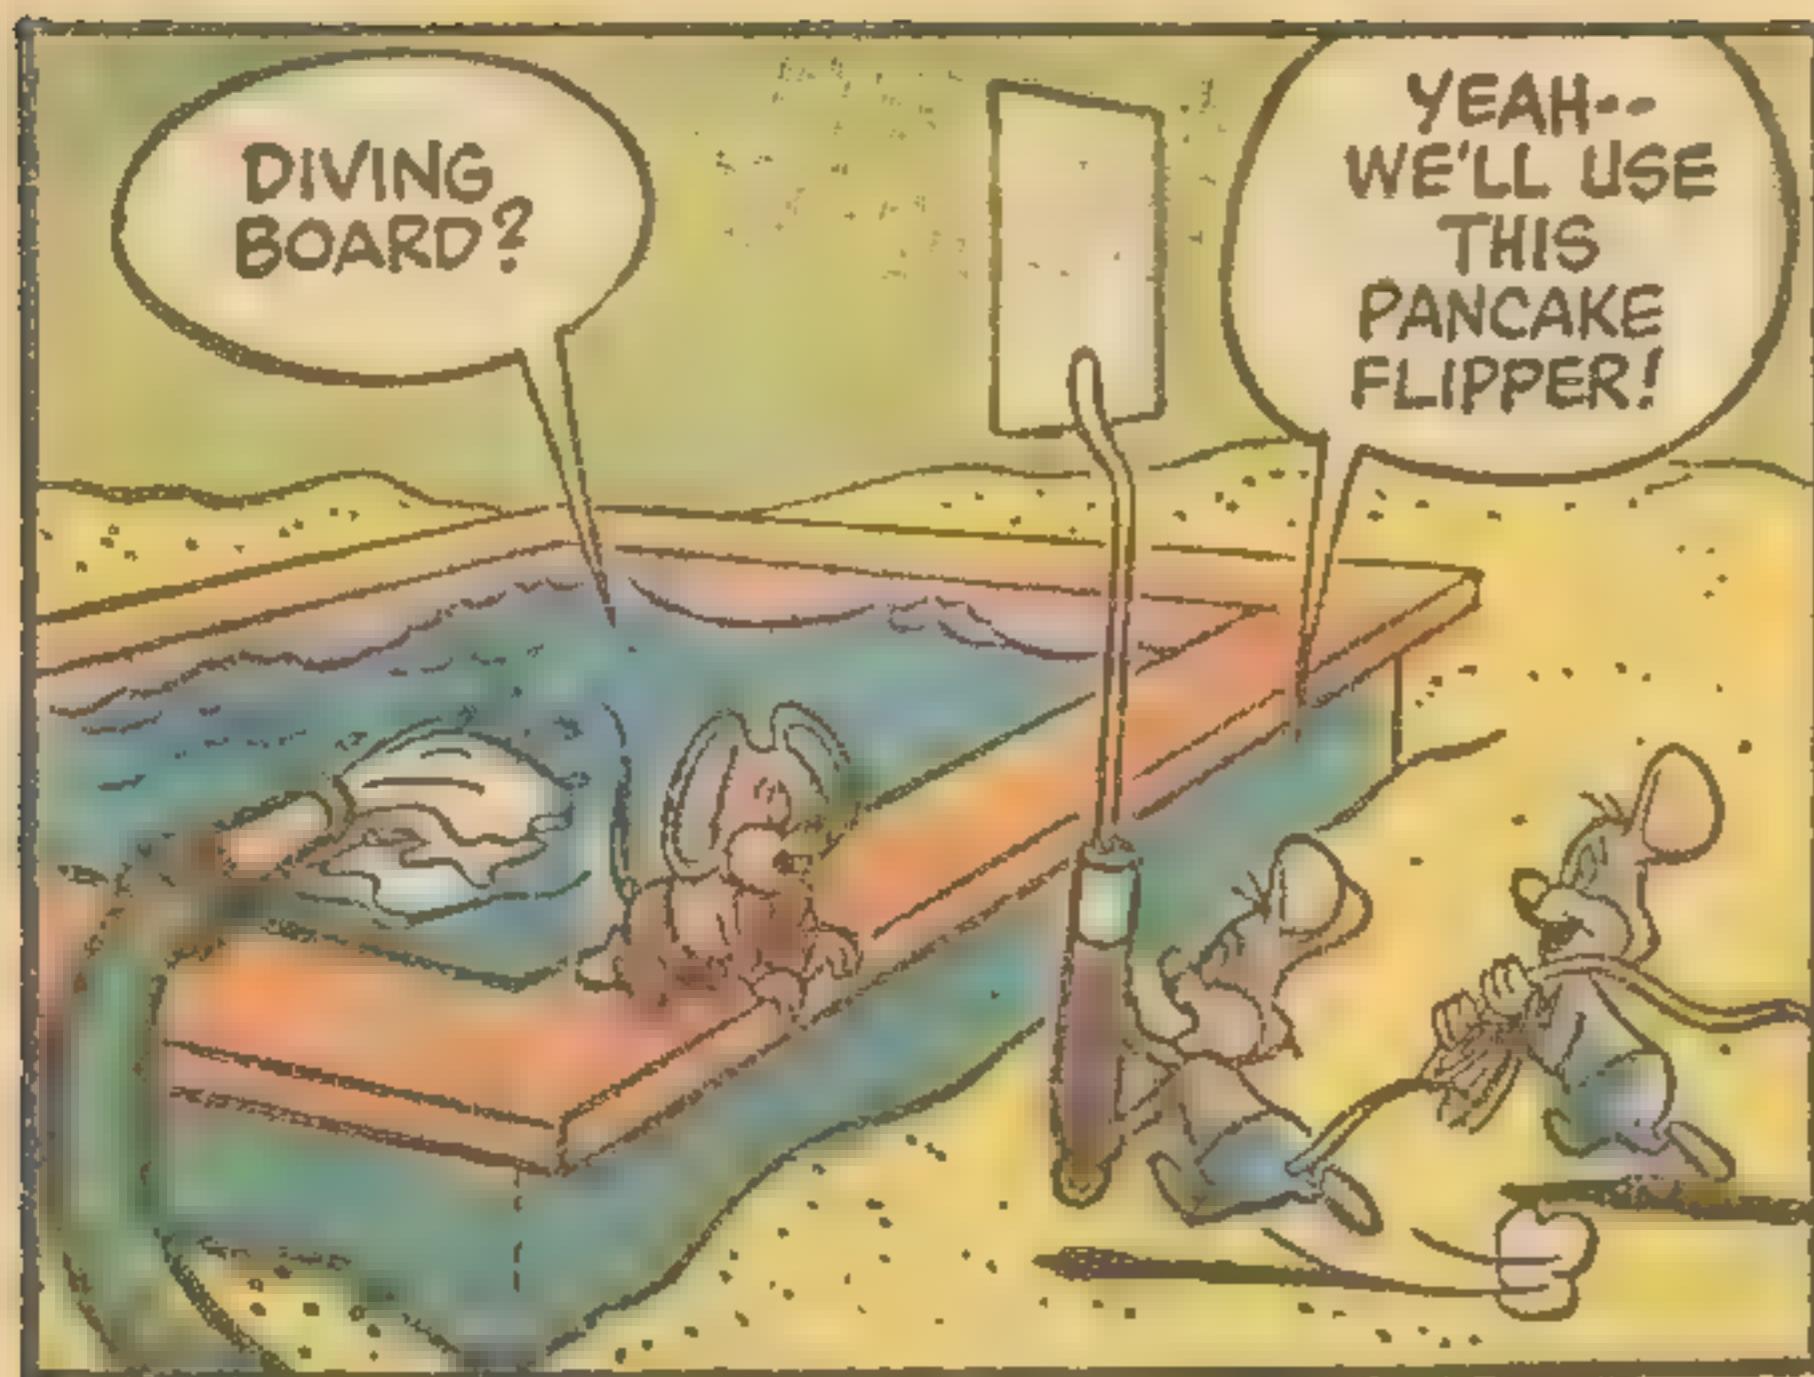

Frankie smiled, and said, "In the first place, it wasn't Mrs. Smith's brother. It was her uncle. Then it wasn't Buffalo, it was Chicago. It wasn't fifty thousand, but ten thousand, and it was the real estate business. And besides, I just finished telling it to you a few minutes ago!"

BIG BROTHER TO THE RESCUE

Peter Pekingese dashed happily out of the house, looking for someone to play with. A group of dogs passed by at the side of the road and he yipped gaily to them: "Wait, up, fellers!"

The stray dogs stopped and sniffed distainfully. "Look what's coming!" a big brown dog said, "that little snip again, with the funny name."

"And the funny, pug-nosed face!" said a shaggy white dog.

Peter stopped, hurt. "Don't you want to play with me?" he asked.

"Ha ha ha ha!" roared the other dogs. "Play with you?" said one. "I'm afraid I'd fall over you!" He was a nasty-faced black hound, and he trotted up to Peter with a sly look on his face.

Now the Pekingese is a small dog, but he is plenty spunky. Peter was annoyed now.

Peter stood his ground bravely: "You wouldn't try that with my big brother!" he said.

"Your big brother!" guffawed the brown dog. "Get that! A BIG Pekingese!"

"Does your brother like to rough-house?" asked the shaggy white dog. "Like this?" Full tilt, he ran chest-on into little Peter, knocking him end over end. "Does your big, tough brother like to play like that?"

"Well, yes," a voice behind them said, "As a matter of fact, I love to play like that!"

The white dog turned just in time to see a huge English bulldog charging at him. They met chest to chest, with a shattering crash, and the vast wall-broad chest muscles of the bulldog sent the shaggy white dog flying end over end, to where he sprawled next to Peter.

"Isn't he strong?" grinned Peter. "Play with them some more, Mike," he called.

"Tug of war, anyone?" asked Mike. "Here, all of you grab hold!" He offered one end of the rope, and the brown dog and the mean black dog grabbed tight, bracing themselves with all their might. It didn't do them any good. With a mighty tug, Mike soon had them spinning wildly, dizzily, and finally deposited them next to their shaggy white crony.

"C'mon, Peter," Mike said. "Let's go home."

"Wait a minute," whined the white dog — "Are you really his brother?"

"Sure!" said Mike. "His parents adopted me when I was a baby, after my own mother was killed." He grinned broadly. "They liked my pug nose!"

WENDY, THE GOOD LITTLE WITCH

THE RULE OF THE JUNGLE

With a terrible swoosh the great lion's paw swung. Marty Monkey ducked and stood still long enough to watch the huge cat prepare to swing again. Then with great chattering Marty scampered up a tall tree to safety.

The little monkey glared down at the great lion and mumbled to himself. His friend Michael leaped over from another tree and smacked him on the back.

"I'll bet I know what you're saying to yourself!" said Michael happily. "I'll bet you're saying, 'Thank goodness I escaped without getting hurt!' You were lucky! I saw it all!"

"I'm not saying any such thing!" shouted Marty. "I'm bawling myself out for being such a coward! I should have ducked under his right and planted one right in his whiskers! Instead I ran up a tree . . . I'm nothing but a coward!"

Marty blubbered and Michael looked at him in amazement. "You must be kidding!" Michael exclaimed. "A monkey doesn't swing back at a LION!"

"Why not?" Marty demanded fiercely. "A monkey is just as good as any other animal."

"If you hadn't run he would have taken you apart. You didn't run from cowardice but out of wisdom," Michael explained patiently. "The little always runs from the big! It's the rule of the jungle!"

"Who made the rule?" Marty persisted stubbornly. "If the little weren't such cowards — like me — maybe they could break the rule!"

Michael was finally exasperated. "What a stupid question!" he shouted. "Nobody made the rule. Everybody runs from SOMETHING!" And Michael leaped to another tree, mumbling to himself.

"Hmf!" Marty muttered after him. "That sounds like something a monkey would say just to make himself feel better!"

While he mumbled a wind sprang up. It grew in intensity and began to howl and the trees began to sway. Then the rain came in torrents and the jungle became a bedlam of terrified screaming animals as the storm reached full hurricane proportions. Blinded by the rain and deafened by the wind and hanging on to a tree limb for life, Marty felt somebody pulling by the arm. He allowed himself to be led and soon found himself in a safe, dry cave with his friend Michael.

The two monkeys sat there drying out. At a slight noise they whirled around to see a great lion entering the cave. This time the beast, who had swung at Marty earlier, ignored the monkeys. He shook himself with a mighty shrug, throwing off sheets of water. Then he stretched. "Thank goodness!" he reared. "Thank goodness I escaped without getting hurt!"

Michael nudged Marty, and Marty grinned sheepishly.
